SANQUHAR,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CRAWICK, KIRKCONNEL, WANLOCKHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SANQUHAR is a large parish of about 41,078 acres, in the district of Nithsdale. The town, an ancient one and royal burgh, is 56 miles s.w. of Edinburgh, the same distance s. by E. of Glasgow, 32 E.S.E. of Ayr, and somewhat about 26 N.W. of Dumfries; situated on the road up the left bank of the Nith, passing into Ayrshire, and on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, for which line there is a station on the east side of the town. Sanquhar, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen at a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It was a few years ago excavated with great care by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, and many interesting objects were found, including several human skeletons and a well of great depth with a bucket suspended in it. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Orichton, ancestors of the Earl of Dumfries. The castle, as well as the greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is now the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile from it stands the house of Elick, the residence of the family of Veitch, which gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim to the honour of being the birth-place of the "Admirable Orichton." The town consists chiefly of one main street. The family of Queensberry (Douglas) were great patrons of this town, particularly in improvements on the roads which pass through or approach to it. The town hall stands at the end of High street, and has a tower with a clock. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts. In this parish, as well as that of Kirkconnel, the seams are most valuable; the coalfield extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleuch is the chief proprietor. At the eastern extremity of the parish, about nine miles from the town, are the valuable lead mines of WANLOCKHEAD, belonging likewise to that nobleman. They are said to have been discovered in the minority of James VI., by some Germans, who were employed in searching for gold about this spot. At present, employment by these works is furnished to a considerable number of miners, artisans, and others. There are a considerable number of hand-loom weavers, and bonnet knitters are employed through the agents of the Glasgow and Kilmarnock manufacturers. Near the town is a manufactory for spades and shovels. In the town are branches of the British Linen Company's Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland; there are also a District Savings Bank and a Mechanics' Institute. Sanquhar was erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh, by charter from James VI., in 1596. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and four councillors; and, in conjunction with Dumfries, Annan, Kirkcudbright, and Lochmaben, sends one member to Parliament. A sheriff's small debt court is held here four times a year. The places of worship in the town are the parish church, a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, a Baptist chapel, and one for the Evangelical Union or Moravian body. The parish church, which was erected in 1828, on the site of the old one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground at the west end of the town. CRAWICK is a village in this parish. In 1871 the population of Sanquhar was 1,324, and in 1881, 1,353.

At WANLOCKHEAD there is a quoad sacra church, in connection with the Church of Scotland, and also a Free church, for the accommodation of the miners and others employed in the lead works. The executors of the late James Orichton, of Friar's Carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, appropriated £2,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar, called "The Crichton School." The weekly market, formerly held on Friday, is no longer continued, but the farmers meet in greater numbers on that day. There are five cattle markets held in the year, namely, on the first Friday in February; on the third Friday in April; on the Friday before Tarbolton fair, in June; on the Friday before Falkirk tryst, in October; and on the Friday before Manachline fair, in November. Fairs on the first Friday after the 12th day of the months of February and November (old style); and a fair for lambs, sheep, and wool, on the 17th July, or the first Friday after. The latter fair is one of "character," no lambs, sheep, or wool being exhibited, and, with the exception of Inverness, is the greatest market of the kind in Scotland. The February, July, and November fairs are alone held, the others having fallen into abeyance. Population in 1871, 772, and in 1881, 776.

Kirkconnel village is four miles from Sanquhar, and eight from New Cumnock, situate on the high road between Dumfries and Glasgow. It contains the parish church and parochial school. The parish, which is bounded by that of Sanquhar on the south and east, is fifteen miles in length and eight in breadth, and contains about 26,808 acres. In it are two mineral springs, one possessing medicinal properties similar in effect to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat; the other similar to the Kirkland spa, in Galloway. The village inhabitants are partly employed in agriculture and in the adjoining coal works. The Duke of Buccleuch is proprietor of nearly the whole of this parish. Population in 1871, 492, and in 1881, 427.

THORNHILL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MORTON, DURISDEER, KEIR AND PENPONT, THE VILLAGE OF CARRON BRIDGE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THORNHILL is a very respectable and considerable village in the parish of Morton, 66 miles s. by e. of Glasgow, 48 n.w. of Carlisle, 40 n.e. of Newton Stewart, 44 s.e. of Kilmarnock, 30 n.w. of Annan, the same distance s.e. of Cumnock, 22 n.e. of new Galoway, 14 n.w. of Dumfries, 13 s.e. of Sanquhar, and 7½ n.e. of Moniaive. It is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and is charmingly situated towards the centre of the extensive amphitheatre of hills which include Middle Nithsdale, with the river Nith winding through the valley. About four miles from Thornhill is Drumlanrig Castle, the noble mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry; it is beautifully situated on rising ground on the right bank of the river, overlooking the whole district. Within the last half century the woods around the castle have been greatly extended, and now cover a large portion of country. The gardens and pleasure grounds of the castle are very beautiful; they are kept with great care, and are free to the inspection of visitors on Tuesdays and Fridays. The castle was re-built by William, first Duke of Queensberry, between the years 1679 and 1689, and it is said that the expense incurred in building was so great that the Duke, not wishing that any one should inspect the accounts connected with it, wrote upon them "the deil pyke out his een wha looks herein." It is also related that the Duke only slept one night in the castle that had cost him so much in erecting. Some of the remains of a very ancient building, which was called the House of the Hassock, and on the site of which the present castle was built, may still be traced. In the year 1776, when Mr. Pennant visited Drumlanrig, there was a breed of wild cattle in the woods, which are described as having been of a milk-white colour, with black ears and finely curved horns. It is said they were removed to Chillingham Castle in Northumberland, where the breed still exists as well as at Hamilton. Within a mile of Drumlanrig Castle there are the ruins of a very ancient castle, which a few years ago was excavated with great care by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch; this is Tibber's Castle, which appears to have been destroyed in the time of Bruce, and is referred to in Blind Harry's metrical history of Sir William Wallace. About three miles from Thornhill are the very fine ruins of Morton Castle. It is very ancient, having been under the care of Sir Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray during the minority of David Bruce. The ruins and the surrounding scenery are very picturesque, and have formed a study for several distinguished painters, viz., Thomson, of Duddingston, and Horatio McCulloch. The remains of Roman encampments, and, in the high grounds, of ancient British encampments, are very numerous over the whole district, and at one time there were many cairns of stones. About three miles from Thornhill, in the parish of Closeburn, there is a very remarkable ravine, worn out of the soft sandstone by a small rivulet. This is Crickhope Linn, classical from the writings of Sir Walter Scott, in which it is described as being the hiding place of Balfour of Burley. This place, as well as almost every glen in this district, has associations connected with the times of the persecuted covenanters. The whole of the district may also be said to form part of "the land of Burns." Over it he travelled while engaged in the duties of the excise, and many of his finest poems are connected with it. The village of Thornhill is in a very salubrious situation, the streets are wide, and the houses are neatly disposed. The tenure upon which the houses are held is doubtful. The land belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. In Thornhill is a society of young men, having for their object the diffusion of knowledge among the people by means of public lectures. There is also a public library containing about 800 volumes, several benevolent societies, a musical club, a bowling green, an instrumental band, &c. There is also a museum of natural history and antiquities, where almost everything strange that is found in the county finds a resting place, contributions having been received from almost all parts of the world. The building, which was erected in 1869, is well situated close to the village, and is surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds in which there is an extensive collection of plants, shrubs and trees; the whole is the work of Dr. Grierson. A society named the Society of Enquiry, having for its object original research and observation in science, has monthly meetings in the museum. The Nithsdale Agricultural Society's show is held on the third Tuesday of September, annually; William Austin, Esq., being its present secretary. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature, there is, however, a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable hotels that can be met with in the south of Scotland; they are the Buccleuch and Queensberry Arms and the George. The parish church, which was erected in 1781, was situated about a mile and a half from Morton Castle, but as the population had congregated in Thornhill in later years, it was taken down and a handsome one built in 1840-1, near the village, by the Duke of Buccleuch, at a cost of £3,550, affording accommodation for 1,200 persons. There are also places of worship for the Reformed and United Presbyterian and Moravian bodies. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in February (old style), and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers. The population of Thornhill in 1871 was 1,349; and of the parish of Morton, 2,097; in 1881 the village numbered 1,289, and the parish, 2,118.

CARRON BRIDGE is a village in the parishes of Morton and Durisdeer; it stands on the river Carron, on the road from Sanquhar to Dumfries, 13½ miles north-west of Thornhill; it contains a school, built and supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway.

The parish of MORTON extends from the left bank of the Nith, north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between six and seven miles, by a breadth of about four, its contents being 8,036 acres. It is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn; it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and Cample streams pass through the parish, the whole of which belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, exclusive of one small property.

KEIR is a parish of about 7,806 acres, possessing a considerable quantity of plantation and limestone; it is bounded on the east by Closeburn, on the north-west and north by Tynron and Penpont, and on the south by Dunscore; its length is six and a half miles, and its greatest breadth two and a half. One half of the parish is arable, and the other half is divided into pasture, meadow and woodlands. There is a church belonging to the Establishment and two public schools. Population in 1871, 828, and in 1881, 826.

PENPONT parish, containing 21,961 acres, gives name to a presbytery. It is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds; the latter description of land is found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about two miles from Thornhill; the church, which is contiguous to the village, was built in 1789; it underwent a thorough repair in 1884, when a session house was annexed to it. It is a handsome edifice of sandstone, and has a clock tower and spire. There are also places of worship for the Reformed and United Presbyterians. The village is lighted with gas, and the houses are supplied with water. The Glenuhargen Craig, rising to a great height, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, &c. Population in 1871, 1,323, and in 1881, 1,327.

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is eight miles in length and six in breadth, acreage about 19,717. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the superb and noble residence of the Duke of Buccleuch; it was erected towards the close of the seventeenth century. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Adjoining the parish church is the sepulchral vault of the Drumlanrig Dungslasses; over it is a magnificent marble monument and two sculptured figures in the Rouilliac taste, representing James, second Duke of Queensberry, and his Duchess; this monument was brought from Rome. Exclusive of one small property, the entire parish belongs to the nobleman before-mentioned. Population in 1871, 1,169, and in 1881, 1,193.

EDINBURGSHIRE.

THE County of EDINBURGH, or MID-LOTHIAN, lies in the southern division of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth (an arm of the German Ocean); by Linlithgowshire, or West-Lothian, on the west; by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk on the south; and by Haddingtonshire, or East-Lothian, with small portions of Berwickshire and Roxburghshire on the east. The length of the county, from east to west, is about thirty-six miles; and its breadth, from its extreme apex on the south, to near Musselburgh on the north, where the eastern extremity of the county abuts on Haddingtonshire, is about twenty-four miles. The figure of this county, which is very irregular, may be said to describe the segment of a circle, indented on its southern boundary by the counties of Berwick and Selkirk, and on its south-western verge by Lanarkshire. It contains about three hundred and sixty-seven square miles, or 234,926 acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In respect to the appellation "Edinburgh," all the information that can be obtained on this subject, from the obscurity of ages, is furnished in the description of the capital; while that of "Lothian" will be given in the present article. In the first century of the christian era, this district of Scotland, according to best authorities (including the Messrs. Chambers, from whose valuable topography we have drawn largely), was inhabited by tribes of Ottadina and Gadeni, the British descendants of those enterprising foreign Celts, who had first landed in the island. The Roman legions entered Edinburghshire about the year A.D. 80, when Agricola formed a chain of forts across the isthmus of land between the estuaries of Clyde and Forth. We shall pass over the imperfect history of the wars of the natives and their irresistible enemies, the Romans, who finally secured the space they had at first marked down as their own. The skilful general who restored the Roman power was Theodosius, under the Emperor Valentinian I., who in compliment to his imperial master, entitled the extensive district he had thus conquered the province of Valentia, which this warlike people retained possession of three hundred and sixty years. During their residence they reared altars, baths, granaries, and other works of art, still occasionally seen, and left those coins and weapons which from time to time are exposed in turning up the surface of the soil. The exigencies of the state at length required their presence nearer the capital, but it was with extreme regret that they abandoned their settlement. The date of their abdication is 446, and the epoch of the re-subversion of the Romanised Ottadini by Saxon invaders is only three years later. After a century of hard fighting, the superior genius of the Saxon Ida fixed this new race in those districts now comprehended in the shires of Berwick, part of Roxburgh, Haddington, Linlithgow, and a portion of Stirling. In the course of time this province obtained the distinctive appellation of Lothian, Lothene, and more recently LOTHIAN. The origin of this title has occasioned much controversy, without arriving at a satisfactory conclusion upon its derivation. In common speech the district is to this day called Loudian, or Loudon; thus the proper pronunciation is more correct, as regards etymology, than that which is in use among writers. Every foot of ground covered by the metropolis and its environs has been the scene of warlike strife, frequently involving the fate of the kingdom. In the struggle which Edward III. maintained for the restoration of the Balliol dynasty, one of the most sanguinary battles was fought on the Borough-moor of the metropolis. In 1385 Mid-Lothian was subjected to the horrors of pillage and conflagration, in the expedition of Richard II.; and a century and a half later, it suffered much from the invasion of the English, on account of the treaty of marriage between the son of Henry VIII. and the young Queen of Scots. The county was, soon after, the scene of many of the insurrectionary movements against the authority of Queen Mary, particularly that at Carberry Hill. Of the many interesting events connected with this county, the metropolis of it has been the nucleus; and our history of Edinburgh, therefore, in the preceding pages, will present many details.

SURFACE, SOIL, AND CLIMATE.—The greater proportion of the county is, if not mountainous, hilly, and in many places wild and pastoral. The most prominent rising grounds are the Pentland Hills, and the following eminences (with their altitude above the level of the sea): Moorfoot Hills, 1,850 feet; Caerketton (Pentland range), 1,555; Spittal Hill, 1,360; Arthur's Seat (from its base, 700), 796; House of Whim, 884; Woodhouselee, 720; Dalnahoo Hill, 683; summit of Braid Hills, 680; Pennycook, 586; Salisbury Crags, 550; Craig Lockhart Hill, 540; Battery of Edinburgh Castle, 510; Corstophine Hill, 470; Calton Hill, 350; Dalkeith, 200. It is ascertained that by the close of the eleventh century agriculture had made some progress in the district of Mid-Lothian. During the last and present century much has been accomplished in this part, in rearing plantations; but it is to the society of Improvers, formed at Edinburgh, about the year 1723, that this county is mainly indebted for its advancement in agriculture. In 1744 potatoes were first raised in fields, and in about thirty years afterwards their cultivation was completely established in the county. The agriculture of Mid-Lothian, like that of East-Lothian, is now conducted in the best manner that science can suggest, or capital render efficient. Upon the whole, it may be remarked with regard to the soil of this county, and its management, that a very active spirit of improvement everywhere prevails; cultivation is rapidly ascending the hills, while the boggy grounds are gradually undergoing a process of drainage. The universally prevalent system of leases here, generally for nineteen years, gives the tenant farmers of Scotland an independence which tenants at will, or from year to year cannot have; and enables them with confidence to expend money on the land. The CLIMATE is, upon the whole, salubrious, and not unfavourable to vegetation; its greatest drawback is variability.

MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, AND COMMERCE.—The county abounds in several valuable minerals, especially coal, sandstone, limestone, and whinstone. In the western part is an extensive coal field and the eastern contains inexhaustible and rich beds of this valuable mineral, extending from the shore at Musselburgh, on both sides of the North Esk, about fifteen miles inward, to the head of that stream at Carlops, on the confines of Tweeddale. In the parish of Calder are extensive beds of rich bituminous shale, from which paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted. Mid-Lothian possesses sandstone of different kinds, and of an excellent quality. The quarries of Edinburghshire have long enjoyed a pre-eminence, which cannot be so effectually indicated by anything as by the appearance of the New Town of Edinburgh. The works of Craigleith and Hailes, near the city, may be justly considered objects of curiosity. Almost all the houses of the New Town, besides other buildings, have been reared from the former mine. There are several other quarries of inferior note throughout the county. Lead was, in former times, found at the head of the North Esk, on the south side of the Pentland Hills. A vein of copper is said to exist in the parish of Currie, but it has never been worked. The MANUFACTURES of Edinburghshire cannot be traced to a remote date, and have never been remarkable for their extent. It is but little more than a century since that the fabrication of linen was known in the county. In Edinburgh, Leith, and Musselburgh there are now numerous manufactories of goods of different kinds, which will be found under their appropriate heads in the Directory of these places. The principal articles manufactured in the shire for exportation, either by outports or inland, besides Scotch linens, are glass, soap, salt, candles, refined sugar, beer, ale, whisky, leather, bricks, tiles, pottery, iron, chemical preparations, printing materials, paper, and books. The manufacture of paper became first known in Scotland in this county, and the district still possesses large establishments employed in the manufacture of this invaluable material, chiefly situated on the North Esk, at Pennycook, and along its course to Dalkeith. Paraffin oil has also become an important manufacture in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh. The maritime traffic of the county, which is very considerable, is concentrated at Leith, the only port suitable to the entrance of large vessels, and indeed the only one of any kind except those of Fisherrow, or Musselburgh, Newhaven, and the rising port of Granton. The Union canal, proceeding to the west from Edinburgh, conveys large quantities of coals, and various kinds of goods to the city.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—This county does not possess any large rivers. This deficiency, however, is of little or no importance, in consequence of being placed on the margin of a broad and navigable frith. Next the Forth, the Esk may be said to be the chief river; it is composed of two streams, which unite their waters below Dalkeith, and glide into the Forth at Musselburgh. The Leith, a valuable small river, takes its rise on the north side of the Pentland Hills, and after receiving several rivulets, discharges its waters, after a course of nineteen miles, into the Forth. The Almond, the most westerly stream, rises in the high grounds on the borders of Lanarkshire; it is joined by the Brier Burn, in its way to the Forth, which it enters at Cramond.—RAILWAYS. The shire of Edinburgh is extensively interested in the system of railways, which radiate from Edinburgh. No town or considerable village in the county is now destitute of the advantages of railway communication.

CIVIL DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This district became subject to the government of a sheriff, prior to the reign of David I. The office of sheriff of Edinburgh seems to have been at all times an appointment of great trust and dignity; and from the thirteenth to the eighteenth century was filled by the heads of families of note in the shire and its vicinity. The county is now governed and its affairs conducted by the usual number of functionaries, with about forty deputy-lieutenants, distributed over six districts, each composed of a certain number of parishes. Besides Edinburgh, the shire does not comprise any royal burghs, but possesses three of regality, namely, Musselburgh, Canongate, and Portsburgh and the town of Leith. Its only burgh of barony is Dalkeith. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, &c. The contributory burghs belonging to this county, represented in Parliament, are Leith, Musselburgh, and Portobello; the city of Edinburgh sends two members to Parliament, and the county at large one, the present member for the county being the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and for the city T. R. Buchanan, Esq., and James Cowan, Esq.

By the census returns presented to Government in 1871, the entire county contained a population of 153,892 males, and 174,487 females; total, 328,379; in 1881 the numbers were: males, 133,669; females, 205,304; total, 338,973, exhibiting an increase over 1871 of 80,598. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the latter period was 72,677; uninhabited, 5,493; building, 1,006.

CALDER, MID, EAST, AND WEST.

MID-CALDER is a parish and village—the latter 12 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, and $8\frac{1}{4}$ e. from Whitburn; pleasantly situated on the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, on an eminence between the water of Linnhouse and the Almond; and Calder wood, which is of considerable extent, overhangs it. The minerals in this parish consist of various beds of rich bituminous shale, from which a large quantity of paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted at the different works. Coal abounds in the parish, and on the estate of Calder House, the property of Lord Torphichen, is an extensive bed of freestone of excellent quality. The parish church is a fine specimen of Gothic architecture, enlarged and restored at a cost of upwards of £3,000. It was originally founded by Duncan, Earl of Fife, in the early part of the thirteenth century, and was re-built on the original site by Peter Sandilands, a scion of the noble family of Torphichen, in 1541. An United Presbyterian chapel is the only other place of worship. To the west of the village is Calder House, the seat of Lord Torphichen, where the picture of John Knox is hung in the hall in which he first dispensed the sacrament of the Lord's Supper after the Reformation. The house of Greenbank, in the vicinity, is celebrated as the birth-place of John Spottiswoode, Archbishop of St. Andrews. Fairs are held in this village on the second Tuesday in March and Friday after second Tuesday in October. Population of the parish in 1871, 634; of the village, 579.

EAST CALDER is a small village, lying one mile e. from Mid Calder, on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It was originally a parish of itself, but is now conjoined with Kirknewton. At the west end of the village are to be seen the ruins of the ancient parish church, built by Randolph de Clere, in the twelfth century, and dedicated to St. Cuthbert. Population in 1871, 589.

WEST CALDER is a village in the rather extensive parish of its name, the latter being about 10 miles in length and $5\frac{1}{4}$ in breadth. The village is about five miles from Mid-Calder, and $16\frac{1}{4}$ from Edinburgh. It contains a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel. Until within the last fifteen years no trade of any importance was carried on; but about that time Mr. James Young, the patentee of the paraffin oil, having purchased several large properties in the parish, which contain several beds of rich bituminous shale, erected one of the largest works in Great Britain for the manufacture of oil. In consequence of these operations the parish has more than quadrupled its population within the above period, and a new village has sprung up towards the west. In the immediate vicinity, at a place called Castle Craig, are the traces of a Roman encampment. In 1871 the entire parish had a population of 7,865 persons, and the village 2,432 of that number.

COLINTON,

BALERNO, CURRIE, HERMISTON, JUNIPER GREEN, KIRKNEWTON, AND SLATEFORD.

COLINTON, or Collington, is a village and parish, the latter lying at the base of the Pentland Hills, part of which it includes. The grounds rise beautifully from the vale of Corstorphine, and are finely cultivated, enclosed, and planted; the water of Leith passes through them, and its banks are here romantic and wooded. The church and manse of Colinton, standing in the midst of lovely scenery, are four miles from Edinburgh. Bonally Tower, the seat of the late Lord Cockburn, is in this parish, and is now the residence of Mrs. Hodgson. The manufacture of paper is carried on extensively both here and at SLATEFORD, a village in this parish; and the district abounds with limestone and freestone. On the lands of Comiston, which lie to the east, are vestiges of a very extensive encampment, near which is a rude massive block of whinstone, called "Camus-stone," said to indicate the burial place of some Danish commander. On these lands the fountain for the Edinburgh water-cistern was first erected. Logan-house Hill, in this parish, is a considerable eminence, rising upwards of 1,500 above the level of the sea. Population of the parish in 1871, 3,641.

The parish of CURRIE is bounded by Corstorphine and Ratho on the north, Colinton on the west, and the Pentland Hills skirt it on the south. Through the low grounds runs the water of Leith, and on its northern banks, six miles distant from Edinburgh, stands the village of CURRIE, through which the road to Larkhall passes. The church is erected on a very commanding situation. The manufacture of paper and snuff prevails in this parish to some extent, the former particularly. On the estate of Maleny, beyond Currie, and rising above the banks of the Leith, is Lennox Tower, anciently the residence of the family of Lennox, as well as the occasional one of Mary Queen of Scots. At a short distance from it, on the opposite bank of the river, are the ruins of another ancient edifice, once the mansion of the Skenes, of Currie hill. The parish also contains the house of Baberton, which is remarkable as having been used as a hunting seat by royalty at two distant periods—first by James VI. of Scotland, previous to his accession to the English throne, and secondly by Charles X. of France, after his expulsion from his dominions in 1830. In 1871 the parish had a population of 2,300, and the village 820 of that number.

KIRKNEWTON, about nine miles from Edinburgh, is a small village and parish; the latter, which includes the abrogated parochial division of Calder Clers, is bounded on the south and west by Mid-Calder, on the east by Currie and Ratho, and on the north by Slateford. In the burial ground of the church, which is about half a mile distant from the village, lie interred the remains of the celebrated Dr. William Cullen, who was proprietor of the estate of Ormiston-hill, where he introduced, so early as the year 1753, an improved mode of culture. The river Almond, the water of Leith, and the great Glasgow road intersect the parish, which abounds with excellent limestone, and contains some fine seats and pleasure grounds; one of these is called Meadowbank, once the residence of a late senator of the College of Justice, entitled Lord Meadowbank, who was one of the chief improvers of this neighbourhood. Population of the village in 1871, 333.

BALERNO is a village in the parish of Currie, on the water of Leith, and situated about six miles from Edinburgh. There is a subscription school in the village, also mills for the manufacture of paper. HERMISTON is a village in the above parish. Population in 1871, 430.

JUNIPER GREEN is a small village in the parish of Colinton, and about three miles s.w. of Edinburgh. Population in 1871, 716.

CORSTORPHINE AND GOGAR.

CORSTORPHINE is a village and parish—the latter, which commences about two miles to the west of Edinburgh, presents, on the whole, a remarkably level surface—the only eminences being its cognominal hills, not exceeding in altitude 470 feet above the level of the sea. The southern and western sides of these hills are beautifully decorated with villas and well-enclosed plantations. The whole of the parish consists of rich arable land, producing crops of all kinds. The village of Corstorphine is three miles from Edinburgh, on the high road to Glasgow, in a very pleasant situation; that of the church is particularly romantic, and the building itself is an interesting one. This edifice (once collegiate) bears every appearance of having been a favourite establishment of the Forsters, a family of importance in this part of Mid-Lothian; all over the erection, to this day, their arms are blazoned in stone; and within ornamented niches, their effigies, in exquisite sculpture, are yet extant. These and other memorials of a past age are still entire, and from their antiquity and variety must be considered eminently worthy of a visit. A mineral spring, which had been neglected for nearly a century, was opened some years since, and forms one of the chief attractions of the village; it also possesses a good subscription library of over 2,900 volumes, which proves of great benefit to the district. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,738, and of the village, 680.

GOGAR, formerly an independent parish, is a pleasant village in the parish of Corstorphine, situated on the banks of the Gogar-burn, a tributary rivulet of the water of Leith. Here stood a chapel previous to the Reformation, the interesting ruins of which still remain a source of attraction to the antiquary and tourist. There is a station on the line of the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway, about three-quarters of a mile from the village.

DALKEITH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF MILLER HILL, NEWTON, AND NEWBATTLE.

DALKEITH is a busy and populous market town, a burgh of barony, and a parish, six miles south from Edinburgh, and is a station on the Edinburgh, Dalkeith, and Hawick branch of the North British Railway, and on the railway to Peebles. It occupies an exceedingly delightful and dry situation, in a fertile district, diversified with hill, dale, and wood, with the North and South Esk flowing round the place. It is one of the largest towns in the county, and has been long celebrated for its weekly corn market, held every Thursday. Until a recent period the corn market was the largest in Scotland, but since the concentration of so many railways was effected in the capital, the Edinburgh grain market has greatly exceeded in magnitude every other Scottish market. Until the year 1854, the weekly market was held in the open street, but since then it has been held in a covered building near the east end of the town. This market place is one of the finest and most commodious structures of the kind in Scotland, the large hall being 172 feet long, 50 feet wide and 45 ft. high. It was erected at a cost of near £4,000. Prior to the formation of the Edinburgh and Hawick railway, the grain was all brought to the market in carts; now a considerable portion is brought by rail, though the number of carts ranged on the streets with grain is still very considerable. The progressive increase of the banking establishments in Dalkeith may be considered as a fair exponent of its business importance. The Commercial Bank opened an agency here in 1810; the National Bank in 1825; the Royal Bank in 1836; and the Edinburgh and Leith afterwards; the Edinburgh and Glasgow in 1839, but which merged in the Clydesdale in 1858. In 1889 a National Security Savings Bank was established, which is well supported, and has proved a great boon to the humble and frugal portion of the community. The district around Dalkeith abounds with coal, which is of an excellent quality, and is worked to a great and increasing extent. The extensive ironworks of Messrs. W. & R. Muesel and of Messrs. Meiklejohn & Son afford employment to a large number of people, whilst Messrs. Stewart Brothers, of the Eskbank Carpet Works, give occupation to upwards of a hundred hands. These, together with its markets, may be mentioned among the chief sources of the town's characteristic animation and prosperity. There are, however, various other agencies which operate in the same direction—such as Mr. Dawson's brush manufactory, several corn mills, brick fields, and also Messrs. McLennan & Urquhart's brewery, &c. It is proper to mention, too, that Dalkeith owes not a little to the activity and enterprise of its mercantile class, the amount of wholesale and retail business in grocery, ironmongery, and drapery establishments being probably greater than in any other Scottish town of similar size. The town has very much improved this last thirty years, and is being gradually extended with excellent houses and cottages, enclosed in neat gardens and luxurious shrubberies. The municipal management is vested in a board of twelve Commissioners, under the Police Improvement (Scotland) Act, who have the power to assess, and regulate local taxes—such as the paving, lighting and water rates, &c. A sheriff's court is held in the Masonic Hall, for cases under the Small Debt Act and Certain Debts Recovery Act, on the third Thursday of every month (September excepted), and a police court at the Police Barracks, on the second and fourth Saturdays of every month. There are twelve places of public worship—namely, two parish churches, one Episcopal, and one Roman Catholic Chapel, three United Presbyterians, one Free, one Independent, one Wesleyan, one Baptist, and one Evangelical Union, or Morristonian, churches. There are several public schools and some good private ones. As indications of social and literary activity it may be mentioned that the Scientific Association, which was formed in 1835 continues with undiminished spirit and success. The great impulse to pauperism in Scotland by the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1845 led here, as elsewhere, to the erection of a workhouse, in order to furnish a test of poverty, and provide a suitable refuge for the destitute and infirm. The Dalkeith Union workhouse was the first of such houses in Scotland; it was opened in 1849 for the poor of four parishes, but there are now eleven parishes in combination. The cost of the building, which is capable of accommodating 120 inmates, was £4,058 18s. 10d., and this sum with the interest was paid off in ten yearly instalments. There are a number of villages in the parish, the inhabitants of which are engaged in the collieries, brickfields, or other public works of the Duke of Buccleuch, by whom these villages were erected. The character of the dwellings provided for these, as well as all of the Duke's labourers, is of a very superior kind, and reflects much credit on his Grace's consideration and liberality; indeed they may be regarded as model cottages, and they deserve study by those who seek to improve the poor man's dwelling. Dalkeith has been lighted with gas from almost the first introduction of that illuminating power. The company, which was formed in 1827, had a severe struggle for some years with expensive works and small returns, but ultimately all difficulties were overcome, and the town is now well supplied with cheap and excellent gas. In the neighbourhood are the mansions and grounds of Newbattle, Melville, and Dalhousie, the properties of the Marquis of Lothian, Viscount Melville, and the Marquis of Dalhousie; whilst, adjoining to the town, and on the southern bank of the North Esk, stands Dalkeith House, the principal seat of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch. This building occupies the site of an ancient castle, which was long in the possession of the family of Douglas, and afterwards the frequent residence of the Regent Morton during the minority of James VI., when it was commonly and significantly called "the lion's den." The present edifice, which was built by the family of Scott about the close of the seventeenth century, consists of a body and two wings, with ornaments of the Corinthian order in front, and may be termed rather a good and substantial than an elegant house. The park contains about 800 Scotch, or 1,000 English acres (surrounded by a stone wall), adorned with much fine wood, and beautified by the winding of the two rivers Esk. The hall, the grand staircase, and the several suites of apartments within are spacious, elegantly finished, and enriched by a valuable collection of paintings. His late Majesty, George IV., on his visit to Scotland, sojourned at this mansion; and her present Majesty, Queen Victoria, has likewise honoured it with her presence. Dalkeith gives the title of Earl to the eldest son of the Duke of Buccleuch. Fairs are held annually on the first Thursday after Rutherglen (in May), for horses, &c., on the third Tuesday in October for cattle, &c., last Thursday in February for hiring, first Thursday in April, and second Thursday in October for hiring. Population of the parish in 1871, 7,697, and in 1881, 7,797, and of the burgh, including Eskbank, 6,834.

NEWTON is a parish of some considerable extent, contiguous to Dalkeith on the south, having Lasswade and Liberton on the west and north, and Inveresk on the east. Coal is obtained abundantly within the parish. There is also the extensive fire clay works of Messrs. H. & R. Rigg, which, together with the coal mines, employ a large population. There is a handsome church belonging to the parish, and some useful schools, those for children of the collieries being well conducted, and have a beneficial tendency. Population in 1871, 1,181, and 1881, 1,306.

MILLER HILL is the principal village in the parish, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Dalkeith branch of the North British Railway. Population in 1871, 300, and in 1881, 302.

NEWBATTLE is a parish and village, the latter situated about a mile from Dalkeith. This parish likewise abounds with coal. The church is a plain substantial building, and adjoining to it is the minister's residence. Newbattle Abbey, the seat of the Marquis of Lothian, stands in the centre of an extensive domain several miles in circumference. The mansion is venerable and has historical associations of some interest. There is a well-attended parochial school, and at Newton Grange are handsome school premises erected by the munificence of the Marquis of Lothian, in which the colliers' children of the district are instructed. Population in 1871, 2,902, and in 1881, 2,771.

GOREBRIDGE,

TEMPLE, HERIOT, STOW, BORTHWICK, FUSHIE BRIDGE, STOBBS MILL, AND CARRINGTON.

GOREBRIDGE is a populous village in the parish of Temple, about 10 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, and 4 miles S. from Dalkeith. It is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway. Sixty years ago there were only a few houses here; now, through the opening of extensive coalfields adjacent, and also the railway, it has become a place of importance. The places of worship in the village are the Free and an United Presbyterian church. A new Free church has just been erected at a cost of about £1,400. The parish church is at the village of Temple, about three miles distant; the village is well lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. The first works for the manufacture of gunpowder in Scotland were established here. Population in 1871, 966.

TEMPLE parish, near the head of the South Esk, is bounded on the east by Borthwick, on the south by Heriot, on the west by Edleston and Pennycook, and on the north by Carrington. The village, which is about ten miles from Edinburgh, is situated on rising ground on the banks of the Gladhouse water, which falls into the South Esk a short way below. It has an old Gothic church (now in ruins), founded by King David I. for Templars; the new church (also Gothic) was built in 1380. The parish, which is chiefly of a hilly nature, and contains much moorish and pasture land, had in 1871 a population of 1,536.

HERIOT parish is ten miles in length, six in breadth, and situate sixteen miles from the capital; and within the parish is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway. The surface of the land in this district is generally uneven; on the banks of the Gala and Heriot waters it is fertile. These two streams take their rise in the Muirfoot hills here, and afford fine sport to the angler. There are the remains of several ancient fortifications, most of them of a circular form, to be seen in this neighbourhood. The name of the parish imports the fine paid to the lord of the manor by a tenant. A fair is held at the head of Gala water on the first Friday after Whit-Sunday for sheep and lambs. The parish encloses an area of 15,013 acres, with a population in 1871 of 413.

STOW is an extensive parish in the southern extremity of the county. It is nearly sixteen miles long and eight broad, and partly in Selkirkshire. At the village of Stow, which is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway, are three churches, which belong respectively to the Establishment, the Free church, and the United Presbyterians. There is an extensive woollen manufactory, also one for the manufacture of tweeds. In the village is a very handsome town hall, part of which is devoted to a literary institute and library, and a public room for lectures. The village is well lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. A hiring fair for servants is held in the village on the second Tuesday of March. The fast days are held on second Wednesdays of July and December. Acreage, 36,832; population in 1871, 2,306.

BORTHWICK parish lies about twelve miles from Edinburgh, on the Carlisle road. Near the church, which is beautifully situated on an eminence, are the ruins of Borthwick Castle, erected in the year 1436, by Lord Borthwick. These interesting remains, which are only two miles west from Crichton, are eminently worthy of being visited by the tourist. The parish has been the birth-place of several highly distinguished men, among whom may be enumerated Principal Robertson and Dundas of Arariston. Acreage of the parish, 9,836. Population in 1871, 4,720.

FUSHIE BRIDGE is a neat village, in the parish of and about one mile from Borthwick, and five from Dalkeith. At this village is a station on the line above mentioned. About a mile to the north is the village of STOBBS MILL, lying partly in Borthwick parish and partly in that of Temple.

CARRINGTON.—This small parish lies in the southern part of the county, on the descending breezes, which, at their summit, divide the district from the wilds of Peebles-shire. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated land, nine and a half miles south-east from Edinburgh, and consists of but a few houses and the kirk. Though not unfavourable to the growth of corn, the soil is more particularly adapted to that of the potato and green crops; coal is wrought in abundance, and there is also an indication of ironstone. Prior to the Reformation this parish had the valuable peculiarity of being a rectory independent of any monastery. The parish embraces an area of 4,403 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 712.

LASSWADE,

BONNYRIGG, LIBERTON, GILMERTON, GREENEND, LOANHEAD, ROSLIN, AND ROSEWELL.

LASSWADE is a small neat village and parish, the former six miles south of Edinburgh and two from Dalkeith, delightfully situated on both sides of the North Esk, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge. With its handsome modern church, crowning the height on the north bank of the stream, and its modest rural cottages below, embosomed in luxuriant gardens and umbrageous trees, it may be esteemed one of the prettiest and most picturesque villages in Scotland. Within the last thirty years this place has been greatly improved by the erection of many substantial dwellings, and the opening of several manufacturing establishments; among the latter are four paper mills and a carpet manufactory. The Polton Mills, belonging to Messrs. Annandale and Son, are extensive works for making both writing and printing papers, of various qualities. The North Esk runs through the whole length of the parish, and on its banks are presented a continuous succession of charming seats, in the most inviting situations, such as Melville Castle, Mavisbank, and Hawthornden—the latter remarkable for having belonged to Drummond, the poet and historian, and for the caves under it. These caves are three in number; the largest is twelve feet wide at the entrance, gradually tapering inwards; the height is six feet, and the length ninety; above there is a tunnel cut, for the admission of light and the circulation of air; in a recess there is a well, several fathoms deep. These caves are said to have afforded shelter to the Scots in turbulent times. At a little distance stand the ruins of Roslin castle; and adjacent is Roslin chapel, one of the most entire and beautiful pieces of Gothic architecture now remaining in Scotland. In the cemetery of Lasswade church are interred the remains of Drummond, the poet before mentioned; and an aisle of the old structure is appropriated as a burial vault for the noble family of Melville, and here lie the remains of the first viscount of that title whose prominent situation, during the ministry of Mr. Pitt, will still be recollected. The whole parish abounds in coal mines, which have been wrought for more than two centuries. The parish, which embraces an area of 10,675 acres, in 1871 had a population of 7,098, of that number the village contained 944.

ROSEWELL is a rising village in the parish of Lasswade, situated about four miles from Dalkeith, and two from Bonnyrigg. There is a neat church of the Establishment and a public school in the village. The Peebles Railway passes the village about half a mile distant, there being a station at Hawthornden. In the neighbourhood there is an abundance of coal, and the manufacture of fire-clay goods and mineral oils is carried on to a considerable extent. Population in 1871, 790.

The parish of LIBERTON includes three villages of its name—UPPER (or OVER) LIBERTON, LIBERTON KIRK, and NETHER LIBERTON, with GILMERTON and GREENEND—all of great antiquity, but none of them now of extensive importance. The kirk town is about three miles from the capital, and the like distance from Dalkeith and Lasswade. Gilmerton the most considerable village in the parish is situated about midway between Edinburgh and Dalkeith. There is a neat church or chapel of ease to Liberton in the village, which is chiefly occupied by colliers. Greenend village is about four miles from Lasswade, on the road to Edinburgh. The old church of Liberton, which was of Gothic architecture, survived till a recent date, when it was removed to make way for the present handsome semi-Gothic structure, whose square turrets and pinnacles can be seen at a great distance; an excellent manse is adjacent, and the village is contiguous. The parish, which lies at the base of the Pentland hills, is exceedingly populous; and its mines of coal and its lime works are most extensive and valuable. The celebrated cave, dug by George Paterson, a blacksmith, out of the solid rock, was finished in 1724, after five years' hard labour. In this cave are several apartments with beds, a table with a large punchbowl, all formed from the same unmalleanable material; there are also a smith's forge, a well, and a washing house. Here Paterson lived several years, and here he died about 1737. Craigmillar Castle, sometime a favourite residence of Queen Mary, stands on a rising ground of moderate elevation, and commands a beautiful and extensive prospect over the surrounding country. Liberton parish embraces an area of 6,617 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 8,791. Population of Gilmerton, 1,062.

BONNYRIGG is a large and rising village in the parish of Cockpen, situated six miles south from Edinburgh and two from Dalkeith. There is a handsome Free church, two large and commodious schools, with an attendance of about 250 pupils in each; a Town Hall, capable of holding about six hundred persons, and a bowling green, which is largely frequented by the inhabitants and others. There are two railway stations, viz.—Broomieknowe on the Esk Valley Railway, and Bonnyrigg on the Peebles Railway. Carpet weaving is carried on to a very considerable extent, about 400 hands being employed in the manufacture of this very useful article; and in the immediate neighbourhood there are several coal mines, and two brick manufactories employing a large number of hands. Broomieknowe, which is a part of the village being in close proximity thereto, is resorted to by a large number of summer visitors. The Esk Valley which is admired by all who visit it can be seen from here to great advantage, and the view is open for miles around. Population in 1871, 1,857.

LOANHEAD is a neat and populous village in the parish of Lasswade, one mile from that town, rather more than two from Liberton, and five south-east from Edinburgh. It contains many respectable houses, and in the neighbourhood several families of distinction are resident. A considerable proportion of the population is employed in the collieries, and some in the neighbouring paper mills. This village has the advantage of being well supplied with water, which is conveyed to the houses by pipes. Population in 1871, 1,750.

ROSLIN is a small village and parish, the latter separated from Lasswade some years ago, and erected into a distinct parish of itself. The village is reached by a cross road leading southward from the line betwixt Peebles and Edinburgh, distant from Edinburgh seven miles, from Lasswade two and a half, and from Loanhead two miles. It is much visited by tourists and parties from the metropolis, both on account of the beauties of the scenery and of the ruins of Roslin Castle and its chapel. These stand south from the village, the former on the bank of the North Esk. The chapel is one of the most perfect specimens of Gothic architecture that time has spared in this part of the kingdom. These interesting relics, in connection with the loveliness of the district by which they are surrounded, form an attraction that invariably delights the visitor of cultivated taste and the admirer of the picturesque and beautiful. Agriculture is the prevailing occupation of the inhabitants of the parish; but there are the Roslin Gunpowder Mills and the extensive carpet works of Messrs. Henry Widnell & Co. which produce some beautiful specimens of weaving, both in carpets, rugs, and table covers, and which furnish employment to other industrious hands. Population of the village in 1871, 511.

MUSSELBURGH AND FISHERROW,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF INVERESK, MONKTON-HALL, BRUNSTANE, & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MUSSELBURGH, a town of great antiquity, a burgh of regality, and now represented in Parliament, is in the parish of Inveresk; six miles E. from Edinburgh; situated on the shore of the Firth of Forth, at the mouth of the Esk. It occupies a low site on a flat expanse, between the eminence on which the church of Inveresk is placed and the sea, on the east bank of the river Esk, the suburb of Fisherrow lying on the opposite side. The Esk at its junction with the Forth is of considerable breadth, but is very shallow, and meanders over a gravelly bed; in dry seasons containing little water, but in rainy seasons rising with irresistible force from the sources and tributaries in the interior districts, and on such occasion the appearance of the river is grand. Musselburgh derived its name from the mussel banks near the shore. The place is noticed in the seventh century as the Esk-mutha of the Northumbrian Saxons, which may probably refer merely to the river—the name Esk signifying water, and inver the mouth. For centuries afterwards Musselburgh was a paltry village, though it gave its name to the adjacent district, which in old charters is designated Musselburghshire, and a locality on the river below the parish church is still known as the Shire Haugh. After the erection of the priory of Dunfermline into a Benedictine Abbey by David I., the town until the Reformation was a burgh of regality belonging to that abbey. James VI. granted the superiority to Lord Chancellor Maitland, of Thirlestane, with whose descendants, the Earls of Lauderdale, it remained till 1703, when it was purchased by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and the Duke of Buccleuch is now lord of the regality. It is said that Musselburgh received its first charter from Donald, Earl of Marr, in 1340, as an acknowledgment for the attention shown by the inhabitants to his cousin, the celebrated Randolph, Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland, the nephew of King Robert Bruce. The Regent died at Musselburgh in 1332, in a homely tenement, then the best in the place, which stood on the south side of the High street, near the enclosures of Pinkie House, and now represented by a plain house of two stories, used as a school and masonic lodge. Marr, who succeeded Earl Randolph in the regency, conferred on Musselburgh the appellation of the "honest town," which it still retains and the motto is Honestas. But the most ancient charter now extant is that bearing date the 11th of December, 1562, in the reign of Queen Mary, which was obtained from Robert Pitcairn, commendator of Dunfermline, and was confirmed by subsequent charters and Acts of Parliament—more particularly by one from John, Duke of Lauderdale, dated 1670, in which all the ancient rights and privileges are acknowledged. In the year 1632 it was erected into a royal burgh by charter under the great seal, which excited the jealousy of the magistrates of Edinburgh, who contrived to obtain a reduction of the charter that year. Musselburgh, which municipally includes Fisherrow, is governed by a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and seven councillors, elected according to the provisions of the Burgh Reform Act. The burgh unites with Leith, Newhaven and Portobello, in returning one member to Parliament. The magistrates are empowered to hold a court of record, and to grant enforceable. Their jurisdiction extends two and a half miles along the shore, from the Magdalen bridge rivulet on the west to Ravenshaugh streamlet on the east, which at that locality is the boundary with Haddingtonshire, and in the centre of which is the burgh and its suburb of Fisherrow; but the magistrates possess no jurisdiction over Inveresk village, which is included within the county. The town consists of two streets in the direction nearly east and west; the main, or High street, extends from the bridge over the Esk on the west to the beautiful enclosures of Loretto and Pinkie on the east, and is on the great road from Edinburgh to Berwick and London. Parallel to the High street is the Mill hill, which leads from the Esk to the London road, at the entrance to the Links and Loretto grounds. A street known as Newbigging extends south from nearly the centre of the town opposite the cross, and leads directly to Inveresk, a quarter of a mile inland. The town contains a few minor streets and alleys. The only public edifice is the Town Hall, occupying an angle in the High street, a substantial and commodious edifice, including an assembly room and a council room. Connected with the Town Hall is the gaol, now used, since passing of the Prison Act, as a temporary place of confinement for petty offenders. This prison is said to have been erected about 1590, from the materials of the ruinous chapel of Loretto, for which act of sacrilege the burgesses, it is alleged, were annually excommunicated at Rome till the end of the eighteenth century, when the progress of the French revolution finished such harmless denunciations. The gaol displays a diminutive and homely elated spire, the clock-dial of which has the date 1496, and the machinery is said to have been sent from Holland. The cross, a pillar resting upon a pedestal, surmounted by the Unicorn sitting with a shield, on which is the town's arms, is in front of the Town Hall. Behind the cross is the only inn in the town, called the Musselburgh Arms. The town is lighted with gas by a company established in 1831, who have erected works on the Links at the mouth of the Esk. The Esk is crossed by two stone, and the same number of wooden bridges. The new bridge, an elegant structure erected in 1806-7 from a design by Rennie, consists of five elliptical arches, and the old bridge, a clumsy though venerable edifice of three arches; the roadway, high and narrow, and only used by foot passengers, is a short distance further up the river. This bridge, erroneously supposed to be of Roman origin, was built by Lady Jane Hepburn, wife of the then Lord Seton, an ancestress of the Earls of Winton, and grand-aunt of the notorious Earl of Bothwell, associated with the history of the unhappy Queen Mary. The Scottish army crossed this bridge after the fatal battle of Pinkie, in September, 1547, when Lord Graham, eldest son of the Earl of Montrose, and others were killed on it by cannon shot from the English fleet at the mouth of the Esk. The lower wooden bridge is maintained for pedestrians to or from Fisherrow and Musselburgh; and the upper wooden bridge, above the old bridge, is the exclusive property of the North British Railway Company, leading directly to the Musselburgh branch station of the Hawick branch of that line, which diverges at Niddrie, upwards of a mile inland. The station house of this branch, which is the terminus, is on the Musselburgh side of the Esk, close to the old bridge, and is a very handsome and commodious edifice. The manufactures and most prominent branches of business in Musselburgh and Fisherrow are the making of sail cloth, herring nets, oil cake and earthenware; tanning and brewing, and chemical works. The patent herring net manufacture was introduced by Mr. James Paterson, who invented looms of an ingenious and novel construction, from which superior and cheaper articles are produced than those formerly used. Branches of the Royal Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited are established in Musselburgh, and there are several benevolent and religious societies. Inland, Musselburgh is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and by a number of coal mines, in active operation.

The places of worship in Inveresk parish, including Musselburgh and Fisherrow, &c., are detailed in a list append to the Directory of the town. The parish church occupies the right of the hill of Inveresk, and is a large square edifice without any architectural pretensions; it is a conspicuous object in all directions, and its lofty and elegant spire is a landmark in the navigation of the Firth of Forth. In the church yard are the remains of many naval and military heroes, and here also is the grave of David Macbeth Moir, the celebrated poet "Delta," to whose memory a handsome monument is erected at the top of High street. Musselburgh has long been distinguished for its schools—among which the most conspicuous is the Burgh Grammar School; there is an English burgh school in Musselburgh, and another in Fisherrow; these schools are now under the control of the School Board. There are two or three private academies of high reputation. The spacious common known as the "Links," extending east from the town along the shore from the Esk on the west, has long been in deserved repute as golfing ground, and a silver cup is contested for annually by the members of a club established in 1670. These downs are also the resort, for one day in the year, of the "Royal Company of Archers;" since 1817 the Edinburgh horse-races have been run here in the autumn, and the races of the Caledonian Hunt occur every third year. Cromwell quartered his infantry on Musselburgh Links in 1650, before the battle of Dunbar, and his tent was fixed opposite the villa of Linkfield. No weekly, monthly, or annual markets are held in Musselburgh, but a corn market was once attempted, which was unsuccessful. No fairs are held with the exception of an annual gathering on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of August, which is solely the resort of idlers and juveniles. According to the census returns for 1871, the parliamentary burgh of Musselburgh contained a population of 7,513 inhabitants, and in 1881, 7,865.

FISHERROW, which consists of four parallel streets, is connected with Musselburgh by the stone and wooden bridges previously noticed, and both are municipally, politically, and locally one town or burgh, under the sole jurisdiction of the provost, magistrates, and town council of Musselburgh. The small harbour is at the west end of Fisherrow, and is under the control of commissioners. A large sum has been expended in erecting and improving the piers, but the harbour is tidal, the access shallow, and never can admit vessels of any considerable tonnage. The custom house, connected with that of Leith, is near the harbour. A proportion of the inhabitants of Fisherrow are fishermen, and the produce of their industry is conveyed to the Edinburgh market by their wives and daughters. These women are a peculiar class, distinguished from the rest of the community by their dress, habits, and manners, and partake little in the general improvement. Population in 1871, 2,689.

The parish of INVERESK is situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county, and possesses a soil peculiarly adapted for agricultural productions. The situation of Inveresk village is so pleasant that it has been often designated "the Montpelier of Scotland." Delightful views are obtained of the Firth of Forth and the coast of Fife on the north, and on the south the fine vale of the Esk to the Pentland Hills. This village, which chiefly consists of elegant and substantial mansions and villas with charming gardens, was represented by two shepherds' butts when the battle of Pinkie was fought in 1547. The principal Roman station in this quarter was the hill of Inveresk on the site of the parish church, and the Prætorium was in the adjoining grounds of Inveresk House. The old bridge, already mentioned as built by Lady Seton, is in all probability on the site of a Roman structure, as it is in a direct line with the site of the Prætorium. Pinkie House, with the exception of the tower, which is of the reign of James III. or James IV. is at the east end of the High street of Musselburgh, amid fine pleasure grounds and stately old trees. This edifice, which is on the property of the abbots of Dunfermline, was erected by Alexander Seton, first Earl of Dunfermline, a brother of the first Earl of Winton, and consists of two sides of an unfinished quadrangle. The mansion is admired as a fine specimen of the Scottish manor of the reign of James VI. The battlefield of Pinkie, in 1547, most disastrous to the Scottish army, is chiefly within the enclosures of Pinkie House. Overlooking Pinkie, upwards of a mile inland, is Carberry hill, celebrated for the surrender of Queen Mary to the confederated nobility in 1567, and where she finally parted with Bothwell. Near, is the fine mansion of Carberry House. Numerous villas adorn the vicinity of Musselburgh. New Hailes, a fine mansion, half a mile south-west from Fisherrow, was the seat of Sir David Dalrymple, Bart., Lord Hailes, distinguished as the great restorer of Scottish history and antiquities. He died in this mansion, in which his valuable library is carefully preserved. In this parish are found limestone, freestone, and coal, the latter particularly in abundance. The entire parish of Inveresk embraces an area of 5,155 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 10,071, and in 1881, 10,521.

MONKTON-HALL, a small village in the parish of Inveresk, is of some little note in the annals of Scottish warfare, as on the eve of the battle of Pinkie the army lay around this village; and here a sort of Parliament was held by Governor Arran, at which an act was passed providing that the nearest heir of any churchman who should fall in the ensuing battle should have the gift of his benefice.

BRUNSTANE, or Brunstane Mills, is a hamlet situated on the road from Musselburgh to Edinburgh, distant from the latter about four miles. Brunstane Castle, or House, which stands on high ground to the west, was formerly the patrimonial residence of the family of Creighton, who took an active share in the Reformation. In Brunstane and Ormiston Castles, John Knox and other Reformers always found a welcome and a shelter. At a later period of Scottish history, Brunstane was occupied by a very different person—namely, John, Duke of Lauderdale; it is now tenanted by a private family.

PATH-HEAD,

CRANSTON, EDGE-HEAD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PATH-HEAD, or Path-head Ford, is a considerable village in the parish of Crichton, 11 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, five from Dal-keith, and 3 from Fala, situated on both sides of the Lauder, the great south county and London road passing through it. The village is about two miles from that of Crichton (described along with Heriot, which see). The principal street is broad and straight, and the houses, which are mostly of one storey, are well built. The surrounding country abounds with beautiful scenery, and several seats of the gentry contribute in ornamenting the district. Population of the village in 1871, 667.

The parish of CRANSTON, or Cranston, is intersected by the river Tyne, having Dalkeith and Newbottle on the north and west, and Crichton on the south, extending five miles in length by three in breadth, but very narrow in the middle. The land is high and undulating, but is well cultivated and enclosed, and embellished with numerous and delightful plantations. A handsome church, of white freestone, in the Gothic style of architecture, is within the parish, on the road to Dalkeith. Within the parish is Oxenford Castle and Preston Hall—the former the seat of the Earl of Stair. The parish comprises the colliery village of EDGE-HEAD; the Oxenford colliery at this place producing coal of a very excellent quality. COUSLAND and PRESTON are two other villages in Cranston parish, but they contain nothing worthy of note. Acreage 5,100. In 1871 Cranston had a population of 1,088.

PENICUIK,

GLENCORSE, AUCHINDINNY, GREENLAW, AND MILTON BRIDGE.

PENICUIK is a parish, the village a thriving one, and well built, being seated on high land, overhanging the north bank of the North Esk river, and on the road from Edinburgh to Peebles, about 9 miles s.w. from the former, 13 n. from the latter, and 9 s.w. from Dalkeith. The name Penicuik is of Celtic etymology, and signifies "the hill of the cuckoo," or, as other authorities contend, the cry or song of that bird. Below the village, on the margin of the river, are the paper mills of Messrs. A. Cowan & Sons, Valleyfield; they are the largest in this part of the country, and manufacture both writing and printing papers, and furnish constant employment to a large number of hands. There is another paper mill in the parish, which likewise employs many persons. During the war, the spot on which these mills are now at work was covered with barracks for the reception of French prisoners, in memory of whom a monument was erected in the year 1860. The parish extends from eleven to twelve miles in length, and six in breadth, and is watered by the river Esk, which runs through its whole extent. Towards the north, the parish includes a considerable part of the Pentlands, on which are pastured numerous flocks of sheep; the southern parts are more level, and the soil is various. Penicuik

House is an elegant edifice, built about 1761, by Sir James Clerk, and is now the residence of Sir George Clerk, Bart. There is a good collection of paintings in it, and Ossian's Hall, the work of Runciman, is much admired. Sir James also collected a considerable number of Roman antiquities. To the south of the house is an obelisk, erected to the memory of Allan Ramsay, the poet, who frequently resided here. There is abundance of coal and limestone, the latter occasionally so hard as to admit of a fine polish, and in which many petrifications are found. Whinstone and freestone are also plentiful, and in Carlie Hill have been discovered specimens of lead and iron ore. There are several chalybeate and petrifying springs in this quarter; and on the banks of the North Esk, near Spittal Hill, there is a well, the waters of which have a bitter taste, and are drunk by the country people as a cure for bowel complaints. The ruins of some old castles, and several vestiges of encampments are pointed out in this district. MILTON BRIDGE is a small hamlet near Penicuik. The parish of Penicuik encloses an area of 18,680 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 3,765, and in 1881, 5,300.

GLENCORSE, or Glencorse, is a small parish in the county of Midlothian, containing about three square miles, and at a distance of six south from Edinburgh. The road to Dumfries, Biggar, Moffat, Peebles, and Penicuik passes through it. In the vale of Glencorse, on the north side of the Esk, are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to Saint Catherine. The church is built on an eminence surrounded by trees. Near Woodhouselee is the scene of that favourite pastoral, "The Gentle Shepherd," written by Allan Ramsay; a romantic fall of the water is still called "Habbes How." At GREENLAW, in this parish, is a large prison or penitentiary for military offenders. Area of the parish, 4,276; population in 1871, 1,153, and in 1881, 1,490.

ACHINDINNY is a village in the parish of Glencorse, 7½ miles s. from Edinburgh, on the road to Peebles, situated in a romantic dell, through which flows the North Esk. This place has been long known for the manufacture of paper, and it has been said that one of the first mills established in Scotland was erected in this locality and there is one now in operation contiguous to the village. The manufacture of paper was introduced into North Britain about one hundred and seventy years ago; previously all stationery articles were imported regularly from Holland.

PORTOBELLO,

DUDDINGSTON, JOPPA, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PORTOBELLO, a parliamentary burgh and a fashionable watering place is situated on a plain on the south side of the Frith of Forth, and in the parish of Duddingston, with a small port in the parish of South Leith. It is three miles from Edinburgh by the turnpike road. The North British Railway to Berwick and Carlisle possess a station near the centre of the town and another at Joppa, thus giving ready access to all parts of the kingdom. Few towns have risen more rapidly in importance. About a century ago the ground which it occupies was an unproductive waste along the shore, overspread with whins and bents, affording ready shelter to the smuggler and to lawless characters from the metropolis. There was then only one thatched hut of two apartments, "a but and a ben," which stood until the year 1862, when it was pulled down.
The fanciful idea is quite common and generally accepted, that this hut was built by a sailor who had served under Admiral Vernon at the storming of Portobello, in the Isthmus of Panama, in the year 1759, and who had misanthropically secluded himself in what must then have been a dreary region. The fact, we believe, however, is that it was put up by the farmer of the adjoining lands as an outstabling in connection with his farm, and, being finished about the time the news arrived of the taking of Portobello, it was named "Portobello" after it. For a long time it was the only habitation, as it was not till about the year 1760 that the locality attracted the attention of the citizens of Edinburgh, who then began to erect houses in the vicinity. The town now consists of a main or High street, a mile and a quarter long, and about fifty streets, terraces, squares, and crescents of handsome houses and elegant villas, which, standing at some distance back from the streets, and having gardens in front, give the town a light and airy appearance. The municipal authorities are a provost, two bailies, and six councillors.
The burgh contributes, along with Leith and Musselburgh, in returning a member to Parliament. There are a police, cleaning and lighting establishment and a fire brigade;

water of excellent quality is supplied in abundance at high pressure, and the houses and streets are lighted with gas. The magistrates and council have expended a large sum of money on the drainage of the town, which is thorough and complete. They also constructed a broad marine promenade, a mile in length, along the sea beach, in the middle of which stands the Prince of Wales' Fountain, a very handsome ornamental drinking fountain. It has also an elegant iron pier, 1,250 feet long with seats capable of accommodating 2,000 persons, and a spacious saloon for the use of visitors. The beach is a noble expanse of pure smooth sand, affording at all times the greatest facility and safety to bathers, for whose accommodation there are bathing coaches and a commodious suite of warm salt-water baths. The residential accommodation is of all kinds, several hotels, houses of various sizes and degrees of elegance, and large villas suitable for first-class families. The places of worship are in connection with the Church of Scotland, the Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Congregational, and Roman Catholic; and there are schools in connection with some of the churches. There are three banks, branches respectively of the Royal, the National, and the Clydesdale Banking Companies. A considerable trade is done in the manufacture of paper, bottles, pottery, earthenware, bricks, and tiles; and at Joppa there are salt works. The scenery is varied and extensive; on one side the noble estuary of the Firth, with the island of Inchkeith, the hills of Fife and Kinross, the bay of Aberlady, the fertile lands of East Lothian, Trophimlaw, North Berwicklaw, and in the distance the Bass Rock, while all around the coasts are studded with numerous picturesque towns and villages; and on the other side are Arthur's Seat, Craigmillar Castle, and the Pentland Hills. The air is pure and invigorating, and the locality very healthy. These immediate local advantages, together with its proximity to the metropolis, to which there is constant communication by railway and tramway cars, and the easy access to all parts of the kingdom, combine to render Portobello a most desirable place either for permanent residence or temporary retirement. In 1871 Portobello (including Joppa) had a population of 5,481, and in 1881, 6,798.

DUDDINGTON parish is bounded by the parish of Canongate, a part of the metropolis, on the west; South Leith on the north, the sea and part of Inveresk on the east, and Liberton on the south. The parish derives its name from the settlement here of one Dodin, during the reigns of David I. and Malcolm IV.; this is ascertained by a charter of William de Venterponte to the canons of Holyrood, of which Hugo Filius Dodini de Dodinestun, appears to have been a witness. From a very early period it seems that there have been two villages called EASTER and WESTER DUDDINGTON; the former continues in its original extent, though much improved. Wester Duddington is charmingly situated near the base of Arthur's Seat, and at the east end of the loch which bears its name. Round Arthur's Seat is a noble drive, known as the Queen's Drive. The church which is Norman, and of very great antiquity, occupies a small eminence rising from the verge of the water. Though modernised externally, its interior ornaments and arches appear to be as old as the days of Dodin. The village consists of only a few detached cottages, of a humble character, and several neat and tasteful villas, the country residences of families. Duddington Loch is a beautiful sheet of water, about the third of a mile in length, and not more than half a mile from the southern outskirts of Edinburgh. There is an excellent road between Duddington and Portobello. The parish encloses an area of 1,781 acres, and contained in 1871 a population of 6,360 persons.

JOPPA, before mentioned, intimately connected with, and now a part of, the burgh of Portobello, is of modern growth. Some years since a freestone quarry was opened in the neighbourhood, and subsequently a mineral spring was discovered; the latter attracts some of the visitors to Portobello, who fancy the waters may be beneficial to them. A number of neat villas have been built near the road, some of which are neatly furnished for the accommodation of visitors.

RATHO,

KIRKLISTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RATHO is a small village situated about eight miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, nearly in the centre of its parish, and contiguous to the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway and the Union Canal, by which communication it enjoys a ready access to the capital and intermediate district. The parish, which is about four miles long and three broad, lies in the middle between the Pentlands hills and the Frith of Forth. The east part is flat and fertile, but the ground rises gradually towards the west. Dalmahoy, the principal residence of the Earl of Morton, and Hatton, formerly belonging to the family of Landerdale, both beautiful and elegant seats, are in this parish; these with the plantations of Addison give a rich and pleasant aspect to the country. Agriculture is carried on with spirit and success, of which Mr. McKnight first set the example. The hills of Dalmahoy and Kaimies abound with freestone. The parish church is rather a handsome building, and the public school is spacious and well attended. The parish of Ratho comprises an area of 6,147 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 1,844; of this number the villag. had 717.

KIRKLISTON is partly in Mid-Lothian, and extends into Linlithgowshire; the village is eight miles from Edinburgh, situated on the left bank of the Almond, on the road to Falkirk. This place was anciently called Temple-Liston, from the circumstance of the Knights-Templars having formerly had an establishment here. The village is well built; it is, however, of but limited trade; distilling and grinding corn are the principal branches. The church is neat, and its situation remarkably pleasant. The surface of the country is agreeably varied by rising ground—is rich, well cultivated, and produces excellent crops. Here Lord Stair first introduced the culture of cabbage in the open fields. Within a field on the east side of the Almond stands a remarkable monument of antiquity, called the Catslane, erected at a period too remote for conjecture. It stands four feet and a half above the ground, and is about eleven feet and a half in circumference; its surface bears a dilapidated inscription, which has puzzled the skill of antiquaries to decipher. About a mile from Kirkliston is Newliston House, principally erected and finished by John Earl of Stair, and now the elegant seat of Thomas Alexander Hog, Esq. The house is handsome and modern; the plantations extensive and tastefully disposed. Area of the parish, 9,541 acres; population in 1871, 2,187.

POST OFFICE, Ratho, John Glendinning, Post Master.—Letters from Edinburgh arrive at twenty minutes before eight morning, from the South at nine morning, and from all parts at ten minutes to six evening, and are despatched to Edinburgh at ten minutes before eight morning, and to all parts at twenty minutes past four afternoon.

ELGINSHIRE,

So designated from the name of its capital, ELGIN, and sometimes MORAYSHIRE, from being the central division of the "Province of Moray,"—is one of the northern counties of Scotland; bounded on the north by that branch of the north sea called the Moray Frith, on the east and south-east by Banffshire; on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description. Thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of a triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprise 470 square miles of land, and seven square miles of lakes. For many years past agricultural improvements have been made with rapid strides, and the greater portion of the waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beauln on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the Bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the estates of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the "dun" of Rolugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as "cairns," monumental pillars, &c., &c. The "Province of Moray," anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea designated from it, the Moray Frith. So late as the time of Charles I., the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant, and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Inverlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured in a straight line from the hills to the shore; this plain, however, is diversified, over its whole extent, by ridges of lower hills in general nearly parallel to the shore; beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the rivers Spey, Lossie, and Findhorn—with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed "the Brae of Moray;" and is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. Agriculture is pursued in a spirited manner, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county the Earl of Fife and other proprietors formed plantations to so great an extent that almost every part of the country inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. Except sandstone limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The greatest attention is paid to the breed, and to the feeding of cattle, and the culture of wheat is not so general anywhere northward of the Grampians. Little can be said respecting manufactures; woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, as well as linen yarn; which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood, and whiskey, comprehend the principal exports. Herring fishing is prosecuted at four villages on the coast, viz:—Lossiemouth, Hopeman, Burghead, and Findhorn, and fine salmon fishing, at the mouths of the Spey and Findhorn, and all along the sea coasts. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate; the harder kind of fruit, all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum, by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; fruits also of greater delicacy—the apricot, the nectarine, and the peach—ripen sufficiently on a wall in the open air. With respect to the winds, the most prevalent gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent, and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels inasmuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that in the lower part of the Moray the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district of Scotland; in the higher quarter the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the SPEY, the FINDHORN, and the LOSSIE, all flowing in a northerly direction, and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which LOCH SPYNIE is most deserving of notice; it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground; in accordance with this appearance, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea-shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aqueduct tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike. The RAILWAYS in this county are the Great North of Scotland and the Highland lines, which pass through, calling at Elgin and other towns; there is also a branch from Elgin to Lossiemouth, one from Elgin to Orton and Craigellachie, one from Findhorn to Kinross, and another from Alves to Burghead.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes and eight parts of parishes; it contains two royal burghs—ELGIN & FORRES; the former is united with Cullen, Banff, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to Parliament; and the county at large, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputed another representative. The present representative is Sir George Macpherson Grant, Bart. The parliamentary constituency in 1881-82 numbered 1,746. The lord-lieutenant is the Right Hon. the Earl of Fife, K.T. By the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 20,293 males, and 23,320 females; total, 43,612; in 1881 the figures were: males, 20,700; females, 23,060; total, 43,760 showing an increase during the ten years of 148. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the latter date was 8,618; uninhabited, 420; and in course of erection, 72.

DUFFUS.

BURGHEAD, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, NEW DUFFUS, ROSEISLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUFFUS parish extends along the shore of the Moray Frith to the north of Elgin, from which the church is about five miles distant. The parish is about six miles in length, by about three in breadth, and contains about 6,000 acres arable. The villages of BURGHEAD, ROSEISLE, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, and NEW DUFFUS are all within the parish, the population of which was in 1871, 3,716.

BURGHEAD is a fishing village, situated on a bold head and jutting out into the Moray Frith, in the above parish, nine miles w. from Elgin, and about ten N.E. from Forres. It possesses a fine pier, and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam or other vessels may enter with perfect safety. This was anciently a Roman as well as Danish station; the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible, also a well dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. There is also a chemical works, at which there are a number of people employed. The vessels belonging to this place land goods here for the surrounding country. In the parish is an Established church, together with a Chapel of Ease at BURGHEAD, where there are also a Free church, an United Presbyterian chapel, and four public schools. Population in 1871, 913.

CUMMINGSTON is a small village, situated on the road midway between BURGHEAD and Hopeman, and almost without any trade.

HOPEMAN is a village situated two miles E. of BURGHEAD, on the coast of the Moray Frith. It possesses a neat harbour, but the shipping of the port is not extensive. There is a Free church.

NEW DUFFUS is a small village near the parish church of Duffus, prettily situated, and entirely agricultural.

ROSEISLE is a hamlet near BURGHEAD bay, five miles N.W. of Elgin.

DUTHIL,

ROTHIEMURCHUS AND CARR BRIDGE.

DUTHIL is a parish lying partly in this county and partly in that of Inverness; the river Spey is the divisional line here between the two districts, and the river Dalman intersects that part of the parish situated in Moray, for nearly thirteen miles, when it falls into the Spey. ROTHIEMURCHUS, once a part of this parish, and still connected with it in civil matters, is now a parliamentary parish lying between the Cairngorm mountain and the Spey, a short way further up the river than the greater part of Duthil; jointly they extend in length twenty miles by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character, game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about 7 miles from Grantown and 24 from Inveraven and there is a Free church and manse. CARR BRIDGE, or as it is commonly called the "Bridge of Carr," is a small village in this parish, 20 miles from Kinkgussie, and 25 from Inverness. The parish of Duthil contained in 1881, 1,371 inhabitants.

EDENKILLIE AND DALLAS.

EDENKILLIE is a parish lying to the south of Forres. The church, which is near the centre of the parish, is about nine miles from Forres, in a most romantic situation. It stands on the banks of the Divie, a black tumbling stream that dashes from rock to rock along the bottom of deep narrow ravines, and a little further down falls into the Findhorn. The woods of Darnaway on the west, and Altire and Logie on the east, are very extensive and unsurpassed in beauty. The viaduct, which carries the Inverness and Perth

Junction railway over the Divie, near the church of Edenkillie, is said to be the finest bridge in the north of Scotland. It has seven arches, and the height from the surface of the water to the rails is about 110 feet. Population in 1871, 1,236, and in 1881, 1,175.

DALLAS is a parish fifteen miles in length and nine in breadth.
The village is about eleven miles south-west of Elgin and nine of Forres, which is also the nearest railway station. Acreage of the parish, 22,903. Population in 1871, 1,060, and in 1881, 915.

POST OFFICE, EDENKILLIE, James Dick, Post Master.—Letters arrive from all parts South at twenty-four minutes past eleven

WITH THE VILLAGES OF LOSSIEMOUTH, ALVES, NEW SPYDIE, BIRNIE, BISHOP MILL, LHANBRYD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of its shire, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles N. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen and 159 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 33 N. of Brechin, 64 W. of Aberdeen, 39 N.E. of Inverness, 12 E. by N. of Forres, and 9 W. of Forchabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about five miles above its influx into the Moray Firth, at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills overclad with waving pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said that from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion, a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence called Lady Hill, on the north-west side of the town. It is now the site of a monumental column, erected by public subscription, in memory of the last Duke of Gordon. In 1224, Andrew, Bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the Church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin; but the cathedral was burned down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch), son of Robert II., in 1390, who was forced from his fastness, in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and superb edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, two hundred and sixty-four feet in length and thirty-five in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains pretty entire, and was some years since repaired and covered with a roof of lead by the Exchequer, is a specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect, is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins, which are carefully preserved by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, form a conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; while, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south stands Anderson's Institution, for the support of old age and the education of youth, a fine modern structure, erected by the munificent bequest of Major-General Andrew Anderson, H.E.C.S., a native of the place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000 and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground; it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youthful figure, whilst with his right hand he is supporting the figure of an aged man; the building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the Institution, of whom there are fifty children of the working classes, who are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back, or south wing, is the Free School, where the children receive a free education, but are supported at home; the number of these averages from two hundred and fifty to three hundred. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a hospital, for the sick poor of this town and county. This building is delightfully seated upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome; the whole is spacious and built of stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh. Another handsome building of importance is the Elgin Club House, situated in Commerce street. This building is in the Italian style of architecture and contains a reading room, thirty by twenty-five feet; entrance hall and billiard room, over forty-one by twenty-five, and eighteen feet in height. There are also card rooms, keepers' apartments, and all other accessories finished and fitted up in a very handsome manner from the designs of Messrs. Reid, of Elgin. The principal street of the town is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stands the Established church, a beautiful modern structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq.; it is calculated to seat a congregation of two thousand. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns; and at the east end is a lofty tower, surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns. The building cost about £8,000. On the west of it is a raised and spacious pavement, used as a market place for farmers' produce, and also a beautiful fountain, which has an imposing effect. In North street, commencing about the middle of the town, are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, a handsome edifice erected in 1321, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, at a cost of £3,100. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish Episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. During the last few years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and on the south side whole streets of handsome villas have been erected, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves upon the front of High street, have been pulled down, and new structures raised in their place. There are two good hotels, The Gordon Arms, in High street, and the Station Hotel, facing the Great North of Scotland Railway station, which have every accommodation for private families and commercial gentlemen. A newspaper is published here, The Elgin Courier, on Tuesday and Friday. In High street are the banking houses—highly respectable branches of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, the Caledonian Bank, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and a Savings Bank. The trade of this burgh cannot be considered extensive, being situated in an agricultural district, and principally depending thereupon; it was, however, greatly increased by the opening of the great North of Scotland and Morayshire Railway. There is a woollen manufactory which employs many hands, and an iron foundry and saw mills. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool, and timber is of some consequence, and there is a large tannery, while in the neighbourhood are the famous distilleries of Milton, Duff, and Linkwood, also lime-works and a stone quarry. Alexander II., in 1224, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good, connected with the guildry; there is a flourishing charity fund from which decayed members and their families derive handsome pensions. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to Parliament. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin, and from the healing virtues of their waters, with the salubrity of the climate, many are supposed to have derived considerable benefit. The weekly corn markets are held on Friday; the cattle markets are held on the third Friday in the months of January, February, March, April, the second Friday in May, the third Tuesday and last Friday in July, the first Tuesday and last Friday in June, August, September, and October, and second Friday in November, and the third Wednesday in December. The feeding markets are held on the 26th May, if Friday, if not, Friday before, the first Friday in July (harvest), and the Friday before the 28th November. Population of Elgin in 1871, 8,604, and in 1881, 9,843.

ALVES is a small parish some 6½ miles long by 5¼ miles wide, situated about 8 miles E. of Elgin. It contains an Established, also a Free church, and two schools. Population in 1871, 1,018, and in 1881, 1,117.

BIRNIE is a parish distant about 3 miles S. of Elgin, and is 7 miles in length, and averages about one and three-fourths in breadth; the church is supposed to be the oldest in Scotland. Population in 1871, 375, and in 1881, 367.

On the opposite bank of the Lossie to that of Elgin is the village of BISHOP MILL, in the parish of New Spynie, the superior of which is the Earl of Seafield. It contains a few of the trades usually found in a country village, corn mills, and a public school.

LOSSIEMOUTH is a large village, in the parish of Drainie, five miles N. from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx with the Moray Firth, from which locality its name is derived. It is the seaport of Elgin, and was fast advancing into importance, but since 1867 its trade has been rapidly declining. Most of the town is regularly laid out, and is a resort for sea-bathers. Several gentlemen, resident in Elgin, have erected villas, in which they reside during the summer months. A new harbour was opened in 1839, and has since been improved, which renders it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. The cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. The improvement of the harbour, and the facilities of railway communication, which this village has now enjoyed for several years, have given a stimulus to the trade, which has rendered it one of the most important seaports north of Aberdeen. Population of the parish of Drainie in 1881, 3,976.

NEW SPYNE is a parish lying to the north of and adjoining Elgin, and contains the village of Bishop Mill. Population in 1881, 544.

ST. ANDREW'S-LHANBRYD.—This parish comprehends what were originally two—St. Andrew's and Lhanbryd—the former including Linkwood and Barmuckity; the latter lay to the east of St. Andrew's, and comprehended the lands of Coxton, Pitnaseir, &c. Population in 1871, 1,846, and in 1881, 1,845.

About three miles E. of Elgin, and in the above named parish, is the neat village of LHANBRYD, having a good inn, saw mill, woollen mill, a few well-stored shops, respectable boarding schools, and an infant school. It is noteworthy for its geological productions.

FOCHABERS,

SPEYMOUTH, GARMOUTH, KINGSTON, URQUHART AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 S. W. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N.W. of Keith; situated on the great north road from Edinburgh and Aberdeen to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it an Episcopalian chapel and a Free church; there is also a large chapel for Roman Catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crossed the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1829; it has subsequently been rebuilt. This is not an important town as respects trade. Its thoroughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the genteel neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. Fochabers is a burgh, and is governed by a baron bailie appointed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, whose seat (Gordon Castle) graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to and admiration of strangers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and perhaps the finest mansion north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was originally a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a draw-bridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 568 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway at the west-end of the town. The body of the building rises to the height of four lofty storeys, and on each end is a pavilion of two storeys, connected by a gallery of two lower storeys. The ancient tower, which is 90 feet high, overlooks the whole structure and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art. At the eastern end of the town stands an elegant building in the Elizabethan style of architecture; this is a free school founded by Alexander Milne Esq., a native of Fochabers. By his will, dated New Orleans, 17th of October, 1836, he bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Ordifish the sum of 100,000 dollars for establishing a free school. The cost of erecting the building amounted to £4,338, out of a fund of £16,415—£17,800 being invested in heritable security, yielding an annual income of £740 by means of which 500 children are educated.

The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banffshire. It is 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and on the south-east by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here, east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground, which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. When William, Duke of Cumberland, was on his march to engage Prince Charles at Culloden, he slept a night in the manse of Bellie. Fairs are held at Fochabers on the third Thursdays in January and February, fourth Wednesday in March, fourth Thursday in April, fourth Thursday in May, first Thursday in July, second Wednesday in August, and first Thursdays in October and December. The entire parish of Bellie contained in 1871, a population of 2,317, and in 1881, 2,047.

URQUHART is a parish extending from the river Spey to the river Lossie, a distance of about six miles, the breadth being about five miles. The village of Urquhart is very small, and about one and a half miles from Lhanbryd, which is the nearest railway station. The population of Urquhart parish in 1871 was 2,363, and in 1881, 2,371.

GARMOUTH and KINGSTON are small villages in the quoad sacra parish of Speymouth, but locally in the civil parish of Urquhart, with which parish the population is returned; they are situated between four and five miles N.W. of Fochabers, the former situated at the mouth of the Spey, on its left bank. The principal trade is ship building, and the exportation of corn, coal, timber, and salmon—of the latter considerable quantities are sent, principally to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone manure, timber, and coal. The port formerly had a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey, and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on the 30th of June (new style).

FORRES,

FINDHORN, KINLOSS, RAFFORD, DYKE AND MOY.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of a presbytery; 201 miles N. by W. from Edinburgh, by way of Aberdeen, 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 75 N.W. of Aberdeen, 27 N.E. or Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 E. of Nairn. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at a distance of about five miles from the bay of Findhorn, which is its seaport. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks, of ancient date, in Britain. This interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the 11th century. It is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a high-land broad-sword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town, on an eminence, once stood a castle, wherein Duffus, one of the early kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donald, governor of the fortress, which circumstance, it is said, Shakespeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians) met the "weird sisters," who gave him so many fatal promises. The exact spot on which that event is asserted by the country people to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post road between Forres and Nairn, near the toll bar, five miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn. The extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet "blasted," being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. On the castle eminence has been erected an obelisk to the memory of Dr. Taylor, who sacrificed his life by over exertion in his attention to the wounded Russians, after the famous battle of Alma. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower erected by the inhabitants of Forres, in honour of Lord Nelson, the walk to which, as it winds round the hill, is extremely pleasant. From its elevated situation, a fine view is hence obtained, and the object is a conspicuous one for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north, where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the forest of Darnaway, is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray. Adjoining to it is the old castle, a noble hall, built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing one thousand men under arms. Here Mary Queen of Scots held her court in 1566. In this part the heron is so numerous that whole flocks, it is said, at times darken the air, and drown with their cries the sound of the gushing waters. About two miles below, the river, which is the estuary of Findhorn Bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, which was erected by a joint-stock company, in shares of £10 each. The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. A brewery, dye works, manufactories for woollens, boots and shoes, chemical works and flour mills being the principal branches. There are four branch banking establishments. There are two newspapers published in the town, one, styled the Forres, Elgin and Nairn Gazette, on Wednesday, and the other, the Moray and Nairn Express, bi-weekly. We must not omit mention of Cluny Hill House, which stands on one of the beautiful eminences in the immediate vicinity of the town, built expressly for a hydropathic establishment, and its situation is peculiarly favourable for invalids. There are two masonic lodges in the town. Forres is a royal burgh, and governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and eleven councillors. The burgh unites with Nairn, Forres and Inverness, in returning one member to Parliament. A sheriff's small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debts not exceeding £12. In the centre of the High street is a handsome structure surmounted by a spire. The building comprises the gaol, a court house, a council room, &c., and near to this stands a handsome market cross, in the style of Sir Walter Scott's monument in Edinburgh. At the south-east end is a good stone edifice, erected in 1824, called Anderson's Institution for educating children of the humble classes of Forres, Rafford and Kinloss, founded by Jonathan Anderson, Esq., a native of Forres. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and for congregations of Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Independents, and Baptists.

The markets are held on the third Tuesdays in January, February, March, April, and May, the second Tuesday in June, the first in July and August, the fourth in September and October, the Tuesday before the third Wednesday in November, and the second Tuesday in December. Fearing markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th of May (called Whitsunday market), and the Saturday before the 22nd November (called Martinmas market), all new style. The population of the entire parish of Forres was in 1871, 4,562, and in 1881, 4,753; of this number 4,031 were returned for the royal and parliamentary burgh.

FINDHORN is a small village and seaport in the parish of Kinloss, five miles north of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Burghhead on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west. The latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, potatoes, and wood; the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the coal pits. The imports consist of coal, guano, slate, tile, lime, and different kinds of goods. The village is connected by a branch line three miles in length, with the Inverness and Junction Aberdeen Railway, but since its discontinuance the trade has rapidly declined. The parish of Kinloss contained in 1871, 1,112, and in 1881, 1,073 persons, of this number Findhorn possessed 606.

DYKE and MOY is a parish situated on the river Findhorn and the Moray Frith. It is about four miles W. of Forres, in length it is about six, by a breadth of three and a half miles. At Brodie, in this parish, is a station on the Highland Railway. There is an Established church and a Free church. The parish of Dyke and Moy contained in 1871, 1,238, and in 1881, 1,236 persons.

RAFFORD is a parish three miles S.E. of Forres, situated on the river Findhorn. In length it is about eight, by a breadth of four miles. The places of worship are one of the Establishment and a Free church. A market for cattle is held on the second Wednesday in November. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,101, and in 1881, 1,052.

GRANTOWN,

CROMDALE AND INVERALLAN.

GRANTOWN is a neat modern village in the parish of CROMDALE, the latter lying formerly in this county and that of Inverness, but by a recent Act of Parliament the whole of the parish is incorporated with this county. Grantown is situated in that district of the parish called Inverallan, on the north bank of the Spey, rather more than a mile south from Castle Grant, one of the seats of the Earl of Seafield, and at the distance of 35 miles S.E. from Inverness, 22 from Forres, 8 N.W. from Duthill, and 6 N. from Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and a large number of the inhabitants retain the name of Grant to the present day. It is a great attraction for visitors from Edinburgh and Glasgow during the summer months. The trade of the place is of a retail and domestic character, and there is a fair proportion of the ordinary useful shops and businesses which are found in a small country town. There is a distillery in its vicinity, and a large and extensive wholesale and retail grocery and drapery business carried on by Macdougall & Co.; and in the village are established three banks, namely, branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank, and the Caledonian Bank; there is also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are also three excellent and commodious hotels, namely, the Black Bull, Grant Arms and Strathspey. Besides the parish church in Cromdale, there is a quoad sacra parish church, a Free church, and a Baptist chapel in Grantown. There are several schools noticed under their proper head, and also an orphan institution. Fairs are held on the 13th and 24th of April, 15th and 24th of May, 19th of June, 14th of July, 1st and 21st of August, 23rd of October, and 13th, 16th and 23rd of November. The parish of Cromdale in 1871 contained a population numbering 3,517, and in 1881, 3,850, of which 1,374 were returned for Grantown.

POST OFFICE, GRANTOWN, Andrew Gill, Post Master.—Letters arrive from all parts South and North at seven morning, forty minutes past twelve afternoon, and half-past seven evening, and are despatched at a quarter-past eleven morning, three afternoon, and ten evening.

Post Office, INVERALLAN, or DULNAN BRIDGE, Alexander McGregor, Post Master.—Letters arrive from (Grantown) at forty minutes past one afternoon, and are despatched at half-past ten morning.

KNOCKANDO WITH ARCHIESTOWN.

KNOCKANDO is a parish, situated on the north side of the river Spey, with Rothes on the east, Dalles and Birnie on the north, and Cromdale and Edenhillie on the west. Its length is about fifteen miles by a breadth of about six, enclosing an area of 28,184 statute acres. The country is hilly, and generally pastoral. In 1829 severe floods occurred in Moray, and this parish suffered very seriously, many families being rendered quite destitute. The burn of Knock-ando, a small rivulet, was on this occasion swollen to a size equal to that of the Spey in its ordinary state. There is an Established church; and in ARCHIESTOWN, a village in this parish, is a Free church; and one for the United Presbyterians. The population of the parish was in 1871, 1,909, and in 1881, 1,807; of the latter number 321 were returned for Archiestown.

ROTHES

ROTHES is a parish partly in the county of Elgin and partly in that of Banff. It is bounded on the south and south-west by Aberlour and Knockando, and on the north by Elgin, Birnie, &c., and on the east by the river Spey; it is nine miles in length by an average breadth of three, and embracing 19,816 statute acres. The village, which is a considerable one, is about 54 miles W.N.W. from Aberdeen, and 10 s. from Elgin; situated near the western bank of the Spey. The name is derived from Ruddk-ius, signifying "red water," from the colour of the soil of which the banks of its streams are composed. The trades of the place are those usually found in country villages—if we except three distilleries. The parish contained in 1871 a population numbering 2,148, and in 1881, 2,201, of which 1,882 were returned for the village.

POST OFFICE, Green Street, ROTHES, William Watson, Post Master.—Letters arrive (via Elgin) at ten morning and sixteen minutes past three afternoon, and from Aberdeen only at twenty-three minutes past two afternoon, and are despatched at six minutes before eight morning and fifteen minutes before six evening.

FIFESHIRE.

THIS is an extensive, populous, and important county, lying on the eastern side of Scotland; it is a peninsula, having the Frith of Forth on the South, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire) it is not more than ten miles across; the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is fully forty miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superficies comprise 513 square miles, or 323,427 English acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—At an early period the district of Fife, included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire, and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name "Fife" has much troubled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chronicles assume its derivation from one Fyffus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity. Its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and towards the close of the ninth century the king of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a potent succession of "thanes" of the title of Macduff; one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife, by Malcolm III., about 1057; and from this time till the family honours were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After a lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbride, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The lineal descendant of this person now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps, and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V., who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soil, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of the country. Along the braes facing the Frith or Forth, the composition of the land is for the most part excellent, being deep rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin-rock; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrews on the east to the western parts of the country, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor and very wet clay; the tract of the "Howe of Fife" consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay, and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits in its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions; these vales, which from the undulating character of the country, are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Frith of Forth or St. Andrew's bay. The eminences of greatest altitude in Fifeshire are Kelly-Law, 800 feet; Largo-Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280 above the level of the sea. The CLIMATE of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south; the fogs, which formerly were continually exhaling from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands, and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Altogether, Fife is a most important district; its agricultural prosperity and capabilities, its manufactures, its fisheries, and its mineral treasures, its burghs, sea-ports, and fine harbours, and its domestic and foreign commerce—form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured probably in all North Britain.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places; so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles, and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it enjoys a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kembick; pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places, with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which whole towns, villages, and hamlets are busily employed without intermission; fine diapers and shirtings, and the most elegant table linen, are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline is the principal seat; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Blankets and plaidings are also manufactured in the shire, but not to an important extent.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of rivers, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. The North British Line of Railway runs direct through the county, on the sea board from Burntisland to Ferry-Port-on-Craig, having various branches running landwards, to the counties of Clackmannan, Kinross, and Perth, exclusive of the various branches for mineral traffic, leading to the different shipping ports on the northern banks of the Forth. The route of the respective branches will be best ascertained by reference to the towns given in the Directory of the shire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute; in these two districts are comprehended the four sub-divisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the Islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Frith of Forth. Fife comprises sixty parishes, and two parts of parishes, having thirteen royal burghs with parliamentary representation; these, conjointly with Culross in Perthshire, Queensferry in Linlithgowshire, and Stirling in Stirlingshire, return three members; and the shire at large sends another to the senate. The present member for the county is the Honourable Robert Preston Bruce. The parliamentary constituency for 1831-82 was 4,845. The lord lieutenant is Sir Robert Anstruther, Bart. By the census returns for 1871, the population of the entire shire was—males, 75,127; females, 85,698; total, 160,735; in 1881, the shire contained 80,854 males, and 91,106 females; total, 171,960, exhibiting an increase over 1871 of 11,225. There were, at the latter period, 36,204 inhabited houses in the county; 3,244 uninhabited, and 203 in course of building.

ABERDOUR

Is a parish and village—the latter, which is also a seaport, is 10 miles n.w. from Edinburgh (across the Firth of Forth), 8 from Kirkcaldy, 9 from Dunfermline, and 3 from Burntisland, the nearest railway station. This district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm; the small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour—the form of the latter is nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way, and containing 5,974 acres; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills which run from east to west; it is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged in the twelfth century to the family of the Euponts, from whom it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident about a century and a half ago. Aberdour is a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing grounds here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. One of the chief causes of its popularity as a bathing place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. In the village are the Established, Free, and Episcopal churches; there are also two public schools and a Board school. Donibristle Park, the seat of the Right Hon. George Earl of Moray, is beautifully situated at the east end of the village, overlooking the Forth. There are no markets held here. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,697, and in 1881, 1,735.

ANSTRUTHER (EAST AND WEST),

CELLARDYKE, AND THE PARISH OF KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EAST, a royal burgh, and a station on the Leven and East of Fife branch of the North British Railway, in the county of Fife, is 22 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and about 10 s. from St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by Kilrenny, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Cellardyke, and on the west by Anstruther Wester. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and from its contiguity to Cellardyke, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. Fish curing is the staple trade. In 1825, there were only fifty-eight boats from 18 to 20 feet long; now the number is 180 to 190 from fifty feet long. The harbour was found too small for the increasing trade of the district, and the three burghs of the East and West Anstruthers and Cellardyke united their efforts to obtain, with Government assistance, an union harbour, which has cost about £80,000. The present harbours (inner and outer), give a space of 18½ acres, and will accommodate 500 fishing boats, and admit vessels from 200 to 500 tons burthen at half flood; there is about four feet of water at the East Quay at the lowest spring tide. A dredger is at present (1882) engaged to clear the harbour, which will then have deeper water. The trade, in addition to fish curing, is of a domestic nature; baking, fish curing, net, oilskin, and fishing material and steam boat and shoe manufacturing are the most prominent branches, but there is likewise a considerable portion of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c. A steam packet plies three times a week between it and Leith, conveying hence grain, fish, &c., and returning with merchant goods. Anstruther is at present the terminus of the Leven and East of Fife Branch of the North British Railway, but there is now (1882) being made an extension to St. Andrews. It is the station of a custom house, whose district extends to Crail. Branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are settled here. The town is governed by a provost and two bailies, a treasurer, and nine councillors, elected under the Scotch Burgh Reform Act. A sheriff's small debt court is held here quarterly, for the parishes of Anstruther Easter and Wester, Elie, Kilcomquhar, Kilkenny, Newburn, Pittenweem, St. Monance, and Crail. A weekly corn market is held every Friday. This burgh is united with St. Andrews, Cupar, Crail, Kilkenny, Anstruther Wester, and Pittenweem, in returning one member to Parliament. It is worthy of note that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and Professor Tennant, author of "Anster Fair," were natives of this town, and also Professor Goodsir, of the Edinburgh University. In addition to the Established church, there is a Free church, an United Presbyterian, and Baptist chapels; also a public school for pupils about seven years of age; an infant public school for those under that age; and a private seminary for young ladies. The population of the burgh, parliamentary and royal, was in 1871, 1,169, and in 1881, 1,349.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a parish and royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James VI., in 1587; a bridge connects the two burghs. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Anstruther Easter, and on the west by Pittenweem. This burgh was disfranchised in 1858, when three managers were appointed by the Court of Session. It 1860 it again recovered its municipal status, and is now governed by a chief magistrate, one bailie, a treasurer, and nine councillors. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last forty years; among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its being macadamised, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and the county; the place is supplied with water, the streets well lighted, common sewers, and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state; a parish church manse, and offices for the clergyman; and a parochial school, and dwelling house for the schoolmaster, were also erected. Population in 1871, 545, and in 1881, 678.

KILKENNY is a parish and royal burgh, the former is situated one mile from Anstruther, and three from Crail. The parish approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Crail, and on the west by the two Anstruthers. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks, which form the harbour of Anstruther, and the port of Cellardyke, or Nether Kilkenny. Here is an Established church and two public schools. This burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors, and in conjunction with the Anstruthers, and other places before named, returns one member to Parliament. The population of the entire parish in 1871 was 3,015, and in 1881, 3,270, 101 of this number being included in the parliamentary burgh of East Anstruther.

The village of CELLARDYKE (or NETHER KILKENNY) is an extensive fishing village in the above parish, and is contiguous to Anstruther, before described, forming part of the burgh of Kilkenny. There is a small harbour for fishing boats here. The three burghs are so contiguous to each other that to a stranger the separation is not discernible. It takes its name from the circumstance of containing cellars or store houses for lodging fish. The greater number of the inhabitants are fishermen, and about 170 boats belong to the place.

AUCHTERMUCHTY,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF DUNSHALT.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, signifying in Gaelic, "The Cottage of the King," is a parish and a royal burgh; the latter 22 miles from Dundee, 19 from St. Andrews, 14 from Perth, 5 from Newburgh, 15 from Kirkcaldy, and 23 nearly due north from Edinburgh. A station of the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway is adjacent to the town, and one at LADYBANK, a junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the above-named railway, about five miles distant. The land in the vicinity of the town is remarkably rich and fertile, and the climate is considered very salubrious. It is situated on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, ten miles from the former and nine from the latter town. Auchtermuchty is irregularly built, many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater portion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. A stream of water called Lovers' pool runs through the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James IV. which charter was confirmed by James VI., and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer and town clerk, and has a sheriff's small debt court, which is held quarterly. A. H. Tyndal Bruce, Esq., of Grange and Falkland, is a large proprietor in it. There is a castle on one of his estates which was built by the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scotland. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen. Malting, distilling, brewing and bleaching are also carried on, and the manufacture of scales, beams and weighing machines has been established here for upwards of a century. There are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, Union Bank of Scotland, and a bank for savings. The Victoria Hall, erected in 1865, is a building well worthy of notice. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and one for Baptists. The parish church is an old structure enlarged, and situated near the centre of the town. There are two Board schools in the town, and a large school, conducted on the Madras principal, is numerously attended. The North Board school, 75 feet in length by 21 in breadth, can be divided into three apartments, or class-rooms, by two sliding partitions; it was erected at an expense of upwards of £700. The People's Institute, commenced by a few ladies and gentlemen for the improvement of the working population, comprises, reading, recreation, and temperance refreshment rooms, also class-rooms for the conducting of classes for young men and young women. There is also another reading room in the town and a well stocked library. Acreage of the parish, 3,533. There is a weekly corn market on Monday, and fairs are held on the first Monday in February, last Monday in April, July 2nd, first Monday in October and December. Population in 1891, 2,332. DUNSHALT is a small village situated about one mile south from and in the parish of Auchtermuchty, where there is a linen factory and a Board school. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,938.

POST OFFICE, Auchtermuchty, Agnes Dickson, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Ladybank) at twenty minutes before nine morning and at fifteen minutes before seven evening, and from Edinburgh and Markinch at fifteen minutes past twelve noon, and are despatched to all parts at fifteen minutes before seven morning (if posted before eleven previous evening) and at fifteen minutes past four afternoon.

BURNTISLAND

IS a royal and parliamentary burgh and seaport, railway terminus and metropolitan ferry, situated on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, and in the centre of the south boundary of the parish to which it gives its name; it is distant 9½ miles from Edinburgh, 16 from Kinross, 6 from Kirkcaldy, and 3 from Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and twelve councillors. The town council are also the police commissioners, the local authority, and the harbour commissioners. There is besides a parochial board, but having jurisdiction solely of poor-law business. For school board purposes there are two boards—one for the burgh and another for the parish, but the latter has made an arrangement with the former for school accommodation, and only one set of officials exists, with central schools for both burgh and parish. The municipal, police, and parliamentary boundaries have been made identical by an act obtained in 1876. The burgh of Burntisland is one of the Kirkcaldy district of burghs represented by Sir George Campbell, K.C.S.I. of Edenwood, Fifeshire. There are police and and bailie courts, the sheriff courts for the burgh being held weekly at Kirkcaldy. There are branches of the National and Commercial Banks of Scotland, Limited, and a savings bank, an Established church, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and an Episcopal church and school, three boarding schools, a variety of benefit societies, and a railway institute and reading room. New Board schools were erected here in 1876 at a cost of £6,000, in the Elizabethan style, and situated in front of a hill rising more than 100 feet above the level of the sea. The playgrounds are ample, and the terrace in front is tastefully laid out. There are no weekly markets, but there is an annual fair held on the third Friday in July.

Previous to the Union, Burntisland was a place of great trade, particularly with Holland. Since 1608 its trade has declined till 1848, when the opening of the Fife Railway imparted an impetus to the export trade in coal and pig-iron. Since the opening of the new dock the harbour revenue, then £2,200 annually, has since increased till in 1881 it amounted to £20,750. This dock, built by Mr. Walter Scott, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, from plans by Messrs. T. Meik & Sons, C.E. comprises an area of 5½ acres, and cost about £100,000, including railway connections and hydraulic loading machinery by Sir William Armstrong and Co. of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The depth of water in the dock is 22ft. 9in. at high water of spring tides, and 19ft. 9in. at neap tides; the width of entrance is 50ft. It is proposed to extend the railway to Inverkeithing, with connections with the Dunfermline and Queensferry and the west of Fife mineral lines. When these proposals have been carried out, Burntisland cannot fail to acquire still greater importance as a seaport; indeed it is certain to become the great entrepot and outlet for coasting and foreign trade for Fifeshire and backlying counties. The want of a direct north line to Perth has been much felt, and periodically proposals have been made on the subject. The herring curing trade, which use to be very flourishing, may now be said to be extinct, although Burntisland is still a fishing station for the Fife fishery, a large number of boats being annually engaged in the winter herring fishing. Messrs. Young & Co.'s distillery at Grange, about a mile from the town, is celebrated for the purity of spirits manufactured there, which of late years has been greatly increased. The music hall, built by the late Joseph Young, of Dunearn, and presented to the town by his trustees, accommodates 400, and is well employed for lectures, concerts, and public meetings. The only mortification belonging to Burntisland is Watson's, consisting of the annual rent of the East Binlands, amounting to an average of £60, which is divided between three widows and the Board schoolmaster for the education of poor children.

The railway locomotive works, situated between the Lammerlaws and the old town, employed 800 men previous to the amalgamation of the Fife Railway and the North British, but scarcely one-third of that number of hands is now retained here, and the best machinery has been removed to Cowlaw, Glasgow. At the station, which is a handsome structure, is the Forth Hotel, formerly the parish manse, but acquired by the late Sir John Gladstone, who built the ferry pier and the present manse, which he exchanged for the hotel buildings. The present gas works also owe their origin to Sir John, who sold them to the Fife Railway Co., by whom they were transferred to the North British, when their line was amalgamated with that system. Burntisland is largely frequented by visitors, who in the summer months add considerably to its population. The first election under the new act took place on the 1st November, 1876. On the same day a section of the act granting the same powers to the magistrates as are at present possessed by the sheriff and justices of peace under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, came into operation. This admits of the administration of justice in nautical cases being conducted in the town instead of in Kirkcaldy as previously. The only object of antiquity connected with Burntisland is Rossend Castle, built in 1119, by the Abbots of Dunfermline. It occupies a very picturesque situation, and its windows are so arranged that one or other of them catches sunshine every instant of its duration throughout the year. It was the residence of Cromwell during the occupation of Burntisland by his troops, and was a favourite resting place of Queen Mary. Rossend is now the property of James Shephard, Esq., who takes a great interest in antiquarian researches, but there are still vaults remaining unexplored. The parish, originally a portion of Kinghorn, is three miles square, and consists of the Bin and Dunearn ranges of hills, with the High Bents on the east side of the town, extending into Kinghorn parish. Some portions of the hills contain fine specimens of basaltic columns. They are irruptive through limestone and sandstone strata. The limestone is worked at Grange along with the sandstone, and at Starleyburn by the Carron Co., who possess considerable acreage in this parish. It was formerly worked on the east hills, and the exhausted workings there are objects of interest to the tourist, who also finds agreeable walks towards Dunearn, the back of the Bin and Kinghorn, both by the new and old roads. The rock, which marks the spot where Alexander III. met his death in 1286, is situated beyond the limits of the parish on the south side of the new Kinghorn road, and is easily recognised by its ivy mantle. Burntisland was originally a burgh of regality under the Abbot of Dunfermline. In the year 1541 it was purchased from him by James V., and erected into a burgh royal, confirmed by James VI. in 1587, and renewed by Charles I. in 1632.

The Established church, bearing the date 1592 over its entrance, is probably the oldest building in the town. In style it is after the model of the North Church, Amsterdam, the Dutch having a great deal of intercourse with Burntisland at that date. The galleries, which show very antique carving, were erected in 1613, and it was within these walls that James VI. met the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and pressed his pet proposal for a new translation of the Scriptures, a proposal which took practical shape after that monarch's accession to the throne of England, and resulted in the present authorised version. The reason Burntisland acquired this historical distinction was because the Forth was so stormy at the time that the king could not cross it to attend the assembly in Edinburgh, and the assembly complacently crossed to Burntisland to meet the king. The Episcopal Parsonage is an elegant structure, erected by the late Rev. G. H. Forbes, by whose will it is provided that the church and schools, at present in an unfinished state, shall be completed and the former endowed; but there are conditions attached which it is said render the implement of this will impossible with the Episcopal or any other church. Canon Bell, however, who was designated to the incumbency, resides in the parsonage and discharges clerical functions, but the congregation assembles in the St. Serf's, Leven street, under the charge of the Rev. Donald Mackenzie, B.D. Acreage of the parish, 2,565. Population in 1871, 8,872, and in 1881, 4,614.

CERES AND KEMBACK.

CERES, or CYRUS, is a parish and village—the former situated on an acclivity nearly three miles S.E. from Cupar-Fife. The parish is eight miles long and from one to four in breadth, with 10,075 acres; the surface is hilly, but in general subject to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Culter. Weaving linen fabrics employs some of the inhabitants of the parish. The old house of Sootstarvet, once the family residence of the Scots, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work, entitled "The Staggering State of the Scots' Statesman," is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds, which bound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The Parish church, which stands in an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. A new United Presbyterian church was erected in 1876, and occupies a prominent position on entering the village from Kemback. There are also three public schools at Craigrothie, Bridgend, and Ceres. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in March, and the 24th of June. In 1871 the parish of Ceres contained a population of 2,881.

KEMBACK parish is nearly of a triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about three and a half miles in breadth and length; it is three miles from Cupar, its post town, and 2½ miles from Ceres. It is bounded on the north by Dunsin and Leuchars, on the east by St. Andrews and Ceres, on the south by Ceres, and on the west by Ceres and Cupar. It is one of the richest agricultural and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 2,594 acres more than 1,500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. There are several flax spinning mills in this parish, which find ample employment for many of its inhabitants. The church stands about two miles from Ceres village, and three from Cupar. There is also a public school. Populain 1871, 1,056.

CRAIL AND KINGSBARNs.

CRAIL is a parish, a royal burgh, and a sea-port—the latter 26 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and 10 S.E. from St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by Denino and Kingsbarns, on the south by Kilkenny, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by Carnbee and Kilkenny. It was anciently called Caryle or Cair-raile, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note, so early as the middle of the ninth century; its importance in latter days has, however, greatly declined, and notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, it enjoys but very little trade; this, in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour, for it is otherwise eligibly situated. Its principal exports consist of grain and potatoes; the imports are chiefly coals. The town consists of two streets, and two or three lanes; of the former, one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses—several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past wealth. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle, or palace, once the residence of David I., the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partially enclosed in a garden. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce, and it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors; in conjunction with St. Andrews, Cupar Fife, the Anstruthers, Kilkenny, and Pittenweem, it returns one member to Parliament. The Parish church, Free church, and United Presbyterian church are the places of worship. The Parish church was anciently a Collegiate church, and is the same that was preached in by John Knox, when he roused the people to go with him to Anstruther and then to St. Andrews. The celebrated James Sharp, archbishop of St. Andrews, was once minister of the church, and his hand-writing is still to be seen in the session records. There are public schools, one for infants, and two private schools in the parish. Acreage, 6,989. Population in 1871, 1,112, and in 1881, 1,145.

KINGSBARNs is a parish containing the village of its own name, situated in the eastern part of the county, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by St. Leonard's and Crail. Its length is about three miles and a half, and its greatest breadth two miles and a half. Originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1681. The village lies a mile to the south, on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles S.E. from St. Andrews, and 3¼ N. from Crail. The largest and best flagstones in the country are obtained near the village, and marble of a fine quality is met with occasionally. Pitmilny, a very ancient seat, stands in the northern part of the parish. Cambo, the seat of the former Earls of Kellie, now of Sir Thomas Erskine, is in the south portion of the parish. Acreage, 4,074. Population in 1871, 916, and in 1881, 795.

CUPAR-FIFE,

WITH CREICH, DAIRSIE, KILMANY, LOGIE, MONIMAIL, AND MOONZIE.

CUPAR (properly designated CUPAR-FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire), is a royal burgh, the capital of the county of Fife, 32 miles N. (by rail) from Edinburgh, 12½ S. from Dundee, 9 W. from St. Andrews, and the same distance N.E. from Falkland; pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Eden, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch of the North British Railway, and contains the villages of SPRINGFIELD, BRIGHTON, and GLADNEY. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day its aspect is that of a modern thriving town, nor are there any ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar. Of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestige is now visible; the Castle hill where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay and the "Satire of the Three Estates" were acted in 1555), is now occupied by an endowed school, called the Madras Academy; and the spot which once resounded with the clangour of arms is now devoted to learning. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the new town of Edinburgh—in this street are the county buildings and two hotels. Opposite the county buildings is an Episcopal chapel, in the Grecian style; its site is clearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars, in old records described as being situated to the east end of the town. The streets and shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1830. On the north side of the river is the old prison, said to resemble the old gaol at Glasgow; it is now used as stores and depot for the Fife Militia Artillery, a more commodious edifice having been erected for a gaol on rising ground, a little to the north of the Dundee road. A few years ago a fine handsome building was erected in Crossgate, called the Duncan Institute, which was founded by the late Miss Duncan, of Edengrove, for the benefit chiefly of the working classes. It consists of reading room, library, museum, and lecture hall, and is managed by trustees appointed by that body. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture; but there are also other prosperous branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coachmaking, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are five branch banks—one of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, together with a bank for savings. Four newspapers are published in Cupar weekly, namely—the Fife Herald, Thursday; the Fife News, Saturday; the Fifeshire Journal, Thursday; and the People's Journal, Saturday.

As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and eighteen councillors. In conjunction with St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem, the burgh returns one member to Parliament. Being the county town and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. The ordinary sheriff court and the sheriff small debts court are held every Thursday during session.

The places of worship are the parish church and a chapel in connection therewith, and others for the Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist, and Roman Catholic congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science evidences the polished taste of the inhabitants. The parish of Cupar contains 5,736 acres. The weekly market for corn is held on Tuesday, and a cattle market on Tuesday once a month. The parish in 1871 had a population of 7,102, the town of Cupar at the same period having 5,105; in 1831 the town contained 5,010.

CREICH parish, situate five miles west from Cupar (which is its post town), is about three miles in length and two in breadth, and embraces 2,341 acres; it is bounded on the north by Flisk, on the south by Moonzie and Monimail, on the east by Balmerino and Kilmarny, and on the west by Abdie and Dunbog. It contains the villages of BRUNTON and LUTHERIE. There is a handsome parish church and school, also a Free church and school. Its surface is undulating, and the soil sandy and thin; but agriculture is making rapid improvement. On a little eminence near the church are the vestiges of a Roman camp, and at a short distance therefrom are the remains of a castle which formerly belonged to Cardinal Beaton. The parish was the birthplace of the Rev. John Sage, the first of the post-revolution bishops in the Scottish Episcopal communion, and the author of that very remarkable production, the "Fundamental Charter of Presbytery." Population in 1871, 337.

DAIRSIE is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is situated on the main road from Cupar to Dundee, three miles from the former and eight from the latter town; bounded on the north by Logie and Kilmarny, on the south by Kemback, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Cupar, its post town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotteswood, who was the proprietor of the Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, was erected at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Dairsie Castle, now a ruin, is noted as having been the residence of Archbishop Sharp, as well as the place where a parliament was called upon to assemble in the year 1335. Chapel well, in this parish, in high repute for the healing properties of its waters, is the site of a Roman Catholic chapel, of which no remains are visible. The parish is nearly three miles in extent each way, and contains 2,555 acres; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land, and free-stone and whinstone abound beneath its surface. There is a public school here. Population in 1871, 687.

KILMANY is a parish and village, situated about five miles from Cupar, its post town, containing the small village of RATHILLET. It is bounded on the north by Balmerino and Forgan, on the south by Logie and Cupar, on the east by Forgan, and on the west by Moonzie and Creich. The parish is irregular, its length being about six miles, and its breadth varying from three to one mile, and embraces 5,343 acres. With the exception of a few acres, which are chiefly woodland, the entire parish is in a high state of cultivation, being well watered and drained by means of numerous waterfalls and streams. There is a parish church and two public schools, also an United Presbyterian church at Rathillett. Population in 1871, 651.

LOGIE is a small parish, situated six miles north from Cupar, its post town, bounded on the north by Forgan, on the south by Dairsie, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Kilmarny. Its length is four miles, its breadth about one mile and a half, embracing 3,599 acres. The soil is of a rich fertile nature. There is a parish church and public school. Population in 1871, 402.

MONIMAIL is a parish and village, situated about five miles from Cupar. This parish contains the villages of Bow of FIFE, EASTER FERNIE, and LETHAM. It is bounded on the north by Dunbog, Creich, and Moonzie, on the south by Culis and Collessie, on the east by Cupar, and on the west by Abdie; its length is six miles and its breadth four, and it embraces 6,554 acres. The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Celtic word Mon or Monath, a hill—the latter part signifying a mile, or meal, or meile, a mill. The northern parts consist of a fine range of hills, the highest of which is called Mount Hill. A monumental pillar to the late Earl of Hopetoun stands upon its summit. It is a plain Doric column, 92 feet in height, surmounted by a square capital of 15 feet. It is hollow within, and has a narrow spiral staircase by which there is an ascent to the top, whence a fine view of the valley of the Eden and the Friths of Forth and Tay are obtained. Fernie Castle is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed to have been one of Macduff's castles: it has evidently been a place of considerable strength. The greater portion of the parish is in a high state of cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish church is at Monimail; it is a handsome building, and contains nearly 600 sittings. There is also a Free church at the Bow of Fife, and two public schools in the parish. Population in 1871, 918.

MOONZIE is a small parish about three miles west of Cupar, bounded on the north by Kilmarny, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Cupar (its post town), and on the west by Creich. It is the smallest parish in the county, being only two miles long by one and a half broad, and contains 1,258 acres. The soil is excellent and in a high state of cultivation. There is a parish church and school. The inhabitants are mainly connected with agriculture. Population in 1871, 154.

DUNFERMLINE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWNHILL, WELLWOOD, MILES MARK, CROSSGATES AND LASSODIE.

DUNFERMLINE is a city and a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, the capital of its parish, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county. Its ancient title of city is now revived. It is 16 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 47 n.e. from Glasgow, 31 s.s.w. from Cupar, 14 miles from Alloa, 21 from Stirling, 15 from Kirkcaldy, and 6 from North Queensferry; situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Firth of Forth, and three hundred feet above the level at Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated, it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprises a fine marine view on the south, and its salubrious situation renders it one of the healthiest cities in Scotland. In 1057 Malcolm Canmore ascended the Scottish throne. Besides founding the monastery of Dunfermline, he built a strong tower on a height in the adjacent glen, and from this tower the town derives its name and dates its existence. Dun in Gaelic signifies a hill or fort; fiar means crooked or winding, and lyn a pool and running water, which is exactly descriptive of the tower and locality. The arms of the town are a tower, supported by two lions, with the motto, "Esto rupe inaccessa."—"Be thou an invincible rock." A palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation; the south-west wall still remains, a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. For a long period a case was pending in the law courts between the Crown and the proprietor of the Pittencreeff lands as to the ground occupied by the palace ruins. In 1873 the dispute terminated in a decision of the House of Lords, by which the ruins and a portion of the grounds adjoining were apportioned to the Crown. Lately the ground has been duly boarded off, and right of admission to it by the public is granted, while the Government for the time being allowed a sum to be inserted in the estimates for the repair of these interesting and historical ruins. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore, as before mentioned, for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I.; it continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I., who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and, in 1124, translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I. on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland. About the commencement of the sixteenth century, all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; these were demolished at the Reformation.

The city consists of streets stretching from east to west, with a number of smaller streets crossing down hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built; surveying the spires and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city. Within the last fifty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets, but by the addition of a large suburb to the west and east, and during the last thirty years, and more recently, the improvements effected have been considerable. There is a station here on the Dunfermline branch of the northern section of the North British Railway, which affords direct communication with all parts of the country; whilst another line, about three miles in length, hence to Charlestown, is used principally in the conveyance of coal for shipment at that port. The west of Fife mineral railway runs from the town north into the rich mineral district, which contains immense quantities of coal, iron stone, lime stone, &c. A line has been constructed between Dunfermline and Edinburgh by North Queensferry, which enables passengers to travel to and from Edinburgh in about one third of the time as formerly. It was constructed by a local company at a cost of £90,000, but is now a branch of the North British Railway Company. The station is at Comely Park. At North Queensferry there is a pier 400 yards in length, and composed of massive concrete blocks, by which the traffic of the line can be continued without interruption at all stages of the tide. There is a spacious public park, situate at the east end of the town, extending to between 80 or 40 acres, which is finely laid out with trees and has a water fountain; the plan or design was prepared by the late Sir Joseph Paxton. It commands a fine view of Edinburgh on a clear day, as well as of the Frith of Forth for a great distance. The town is well supplied with water. The reservoirs at Craighuscar proving insufficient for the requirements of town, the corporation obtained an act of Parliament in 1876 to ensure a more plentiful supply from Glensherup, the works costing about £70,000. The streets are lighted with gas. There is a strong fire brigade in the city, who have quarters in Campbell street. Fire plugs on the gravitation principle are placed in numerous places throughout the streets and lanes. The sewage of the city is conveyed by means of pipes to the sea, the pipe tract beginning at Urquhart Farm and touching the coast at Charlestown, a distance of three miles. The plans were prepared by Mr. J. L. Stewart, C.E., Edinburgh, and the cost of the undertaking was about £7,000.

The most imposing public building is the Town House, at the bottom of High street. This handsome structure was begun in 1875 and finished in 1879, at a cost of about £20,000. It is built on the site of the old Town House, and by its erection, Kirkgate, which was the narrowest and most dangerous thoroughfare in the town, has been greatly widened. The building, which presents a combination of the French and Scotch Gothic styles of architecture, is from a design by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh, and has two frontages, the one to Bridge street 66 feet, and the other to Kirkgate street 144 feet in length. At the north-east corner and joining the two frontages, is the chief feature of the building—viz., a tower, which measures 23 feet square, and rises to an altitude of 150 feet. There is a clock fixed in the tower, at an elevation of 135 feet, with four illuminated dials, and striking on a powerfully toned bell, weighing 93 cwt. The keystone of the main entrance represents a dragon, the emblem of St. Margaret, and above this on the east front of the tower, is an elaborate carving of the royal Scottish arms. On the Bridge street elevation is another carving of the burgh arms, also canopied busts representing Malcolm Canmore and Queen Margaret, with King Robert the Bruce and Elizabeth, his second queen, all of which Royal personages are buried in the abbey. In the Kirkgate front are placed the eight carved stone panels from the old Town House, viz., the royal arms, the burgh arms, St. Margaret enshrined, the English rose, the Scotch thistle, the Irish harp, the French fleur-de-lys, and the sword and sceptre. Some of these are said to be from the Old market cross of 1620. Other carved figures of a fanciful and grotesque character adorn the building, most of which, however, come more under the general designation of nondescript. The interior of the building includes a burgh court room and a council chamber, accommodation being also provided for the Town Clerk and other officials of the burgh. Perhaps the public building next in prominence to the Town House, if we except the edifices for religious purposes, are the County buildings, one called the Guildhall, standing on the south side of the High street, and constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire one hundred and thirty-two feet in height rising over the front. They contain a sheriff court room, justice of peace court room, and a suite of rooms for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk's office, procurator fiscal's, and other county business. Within this building is the post office. By a gift of £5,000 generously offered by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of New York, a native of Dunfermline, the Carnegie Public Baths were founded in 1875. They are very commodious, and the building, which is situated in Bath street, is from a neat and elegant design prepared by Mr. Andrew Scobie, Dunfermline. The above gift was followed by another munificent donation of £8,000 by the same gentleman, for the erection of a free library. The building is at the corner of St. Margaret and Abbot streets, and is named the Carnegie Free Library. The style of architecture may be designated domestic Tudor, and is from plans prepared by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh. The tympanum of the doorway contains a bas-relief of the sun in splendour, with the inscription "Let there be Light." The interior arrangements have been well planned and consist of library room, reading rooms for ladies and gentlemen, recreation and smoke rooms, lavatories, and dwelling house for keeper. The memorial stone was laid July 27th, 1881. Altogether the design exhibits much skill and taste, and is an important acquisition to the town in an architectural as well as an intellectual point of view. In St. Margaret street and on the site immediately south of the Carnegie Free Library, is St. Margaret's Hall. This building was begun in 1876, and completed in 1878, at a cost of about £12,000, from plans prepared by Mr. Scarforth, Edinburgh. The style of the architecture is an adaptation of early English. The building contains a large hall capable of seating 1,600 persons, in which theatrical representations are occasionally given; a lecture hall capable of seating 850 persons, billiard rooms, a reading room, and several committee and board rooms. In the large hall there is a splendid organ which was purchased and presented to the Directors of the Hall Company by the ladies of the town and district, the money being raised at a bazaar held in the building in April, 1878. The instrument cost over £1,500, and derives its blowing power from an ingenious hydraulic engine. The building belongs to the St. Margaret's Hall Company, Limited. The music hall, in Guildhall street, is a large modern erection, used for all kinds of public meetings. The upper hall is a room of 90 feet in length, 50 in width, and 45 in height. The other public buildings comprise the prison, the poorhouse, and hospital, all of which occupy sites at the eastern extremity of the town. The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, was held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here for nearly two centuries, and became royal by a charter from James VI. dated 24th May, 1588. In this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations, and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th of October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce, in favour of the aldermen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of court, &c., "reserving however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office." In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, four bailies, and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain, and a town clerk; the council is composed of twenty-two members, elected pursuant to the terms of the Municipal Reform Act. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, and Queensferry, in sending one member to Parliament. Henry Campbell Bannerman, Esq., is the present representative. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of the sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife, who holds a regular court on Tuesdays and Fridays, when there is always a considerable amount of business to be done in the way of civil actions. Burgh courts are held daily in the Corporation buildings. There is also a society of solicitors in the town. There are two newspapers, namely, the Dunfermline Saturday Press and the Dunfermline Journal, both published on Saturday.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be entirely ascribed to its manufacture of table linens and damask goods; this branch of industry took its root in the town about the commencement of last century; the cloth is woven of all dimensions, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain, and many firms are engaged in this business. There are establishments for the spinning of linen yarn, and several large factories where power-loom weaving is carried on. It is said that the chest of the incorporation of weavers contains two curious specimens of their art; a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis; and a woman's shift by another named Meldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of the needle; the only part which Inglis could not accomplish was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance, among which may be mentioned the large fire-clay works of Messrs. A. Wilson & Son, at Lockhead; Messrs. Robert Lindsay & Co. at Lilliehill, and Mr. Ord Adams, at Crossgate, where every description of article usually made from that material is manufactured. There are also iron and brass foundries and engineering works, brewing, dying, and manufacture of tobacco. The coal trade in the neighbourhood is also very extensive, and large quantities of this article are annually exported. About 4,000 men are employed, and the condition of the collier has been much improved recently. Six branch banks of the first respectability are established here, in addition to a branch the National Security Savings Bank, for which a fine building has been erected in East Port st. at a cost of £3,000. The board of directors includes the Provost, bailies, and clergymen of the town. In the High street premises have been built for the business of the British Linen Company's Bank, on a remarkable chaste design in the Grecian Doric style of architecture, by Mr. David Cousin, of Edinburgh. There are three principal hotels, viz.: City Arms Hotel, in Bridge street; Royal Hotel, in High street; and the Union Hotel, South Inglis street. There are several other houses for public accommodation of lesser note. There are bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies, horticultural societies, and various charitable associations.

The parish church has been collegiate, and under the care of two ministers since 1645. Of the other places of worship, their situations and the respective officiating clergymen, will be found under a list in a distinctive head in a succeeding page. The Secession church (now the United Presbyterian), which has extended over the greater part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history, the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the Establishment in 1733, and shortly after founded Queen Anne street church here, which, it is believed, was the first or second of that denomination. The most elegant building here of modern erection is the Abbey Church; it is of ornamental Gothic architecture, surmounted by a massive tower one hundred feet high, having the words "King Robert the Bruce" in massive stone letters four feet high round the four sides at the summit of the tower. The interior of the church is much admired. While excavating the foundation, the workmen discovered the tomb of that celebrated monarch, 490 years after his death; his remains were collected and enclosed in a leaden coffin, and are interred under the tower. Adjoining the new, is part of the old abbey church, where many other Scottish monarchs and nobles lie buried. The town and neighbourhood support many friendly societies. Since the passing of the Education Act a great change has taken place in the educational arrangements of Dunfermline. The grammar school, in Queen Anne street, which was the leading public school in the town, is now under the management of the School Board, and is used as an efficient aid to higher or secondary education, the interest of the original sum of £2,000 which belonged to the school being made over annually to the Board. The Board have erected a school in the west end of the town at a cost of £4,186. Since then a central school has been substituted for the Rolland and Commercial schools at a cost of £5,143, and a school which was erected in connection with St. Leonard's steam power weaving factory, purchased at a cost of £1,200. Altogether there are seven schools under the control of the Board, while a supervision is exercised over three other educational institutions. There are also several private adventure schools, which have a large number of pupils. The market is held on Tuesday for grain, which is disposed of by stock & sample. Fairs, the third Tuesdays in January, March, April, June, July, September, October and November. The entire parish of Dunfermline comprises 20,764 statute acres, and by the returns made to Government in 1871 contained a population of 28,313, of which 14,963 were returned for the burgh; in 1881 the number of inhabitants in the burgh had increased to 17,085.

CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWNHILL, WELLWOOD, and MILES MARK are small villages and hamlets in the parish, from one to three miles distant from Dunfermline. At Halbeath is the colliery and offices of Mr. Andrew Wallace, and a Board school. At Townhill are the collieries and offices of the Townhill Colliery Company and a Board school. At Wellwood are the collieries and offices of Mr. Thomas Spowart, and a school. At Miles Mark a school has been built by the joint aid of the parish and burgh School Boards at a cost of £3,000; it will accommodate 400 children. Population in 1871, Crossford, 333; Halbeath, 800; Townhill, 355; Wellwood, 678; and Miles Mark and Park Nook, 668.

CROSSGATES is a village partly in the parish of Dalgetty and partly in that of and three miles from Dunfermline, four miles north from Inverkeithing, situated about a quarter of a mile from a station on the North British Railway. The inhabitants are principally employed in the collieries surrounding the village. The places of worship are an Established church and an United Presbyterian chapel; also a Board school. Population in 1871, 1,181.

LIASSODIE is a colliery village in the parish of Beath, four and a half miles distant from Dunfermline, its post town. Here are the extensive works of the Liassodie Colliery Co. There is a Free church and a public school.

DYSART

IS a town and parish, and a royal and parliamentary burgh, and a station of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, bounded on the north by Kinglassie, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Wemyss and Markinch, and on the west by Kirkcaldy. Its length is about three miles, and its breadth two miles, and it embraces 4,197 acres. The town is situated two miles from Kirkcaldy, on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. It consists of three streets, with a sort of square in the centre, where stands the Town House, a plain old building, with a tower and spire. The central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearance. The streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1848, and have recently been much improved and repaired. So early as 1546 Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt. The alteration in commerce, consequent on the Union of 1707, destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has also been annihilated. The trade it now enjoys is considerable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar linen fabrics, also woollens, tweeds, druggets, and wineys. There are large power-looms factories in the burgh, besides two flax spinning mills, and in the vicinity are mines of coal, extensively wrought, besides a considerable trade in ship building. The harbour is good, and there is an excellent wet dock, with about eighteen feet of water; it is sufficient to accommodate about twenty vessels of different burthen, also a patent slip capable of taking up vessels of 400 tons burthen, the only one on this part of the coast. Coal is the principal export. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors—in all nine; and joins with Kirkcaldy, Kingholm, and Burntisland, in returning one member to Parliament.

The places of worship are the Established church, Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel, parochial, industrial, and infants' schools, a newsroom, and a mechanics' institute are in the town. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravensraig, standing on a steep crag fronting the sea; this castle is alluded to in Sir Walter Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," under the name of Ravenshough. It was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assaulted by a party of his troops. It has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. Dysart House the seat of the Earl of Rosslyn, is situated in the midst of extensive and beautifully laid out grounds. In 1871 the parish of Dysart contained a population of 9,682 persons, of whom 7,107 were in the parliamentary beyond royal burgh. In 1881, the burgh numbered, 10,874.

POST OFFICE, 52 High Street, DYSART, William Buist, Post Master.—Letters arrive from Kirkcaldy, Edinburgh, Dunfermline, Leven, Leslie, Cupar-Fife, Ladybank, Perth, and Dundee at a quarter-past eight morning; and from Kirkcaldy, Edinburgh Dunfermline, Leven, Cupar-Fife, Perth, and Dundee at twenty minutes past six evening.

Letters are despatched to Kirkcaldy, Edinburgh, Dunfermline, Leven, Cupar-Fife, Perth, and Dundee at a quarter to seven morning, one afternoon, and five evening; and to Leslie and Ladybank at a quarter past seven morning.

FALKLAND AND FREUCHIE.

FALKLAND is a parish—the small ancient town of its name is a royal burgh, 25 miles N. from Edinburgh, 23 S. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Perth, the same distance N.W. from Kinghorn, 10 S.W. from Cupar, 8 from Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and the same distance from the Falkland Road station of the North British Railway. It is bounded on the north by Auchtermuchty, on the south by Markinch, on the east by Kettle, and on the west by Strathmiglo; its length is about six miles and its breadth about four, and is situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from the winds of the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, somewhat in keeping with the architecture of the palace, a building well worthy the notice of a stranger. For a long time it was only a ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of Nethill. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Stuart had here occasionally up to the time of Charles II., who called here on his return from the continent in 1650. James V. died here in 1542. A dungeon is shown in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the walls of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk from her breast by means of an oxen reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1615, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, until at length he retired with great booty. The town was erected into a burgh by James II. in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by James VI. in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) to "oblivate the damage and inconveniences sustained, for want of innkeepers and victuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles, and others of their subjects who come to their country seats." The magistracy consists of a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nine councillors. A town hall was erected in 1804, in which balls and other public assemblages take place. A large common, which belongs to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c. was some years ago divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The House of Falkland, erected by the late Mr. Bruce, is one of the finest mansions in the county, the grounds are very tastefully laid out, and are annually resorted to by large numbers of visitors, who find it a very excellent place for picnics, &c. The manufacture of linen forms an important branch of trade here, and the chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1,650 feet above the level of the sea, and appears to have been fortified. The west Lomond is higher, and has on its top a large cairn, or heap of loose stones. The places of worship are a parish church, a Free church, and a chapel for Independents. The parish church was erected some years ago, through the liberality of the late O. T. Bruce, Esq. at an expense, it is said, of £7,000. It is a handsome structure, surmounted by an elegant spire; and to perpetuate the memory of this gentleman a monument has been erected on Nett Hill, near the Lomonds, and can be seen at a great distance. A very handsome fountain was likewise constructed in the centre of the town by the above gentleman, who did much to contribute to the welfare and improvement of this place. A very handsome memorial has been erected in the square behind the Palace by the executors of the late Mrs. Bruce, to the memory of her father, Colonel Robert Bruce, and her uncle, John Bruce, from whom she inherited the estates of Nethill, Falkland Wood, and Grangehill, near Kinghorn. The parish school has been very considerably enlarged and improved by the School Board since the passing of the act. There are other schools, including one for infants. Fairs were formerly held in the parish on the second Tuesday in January, third Thursday in March, second Monday in May, third Friday in June, first Thursday in August, last Tuesday in September, and Friday before Edinburgh Hallow fair in November; but since railways became general through the country, these fairs have fallen into disuse. The parish of Falkland embraces 8,265 acres, and in 1871, contained a population of 3,669 persons, of whom 1,144 were in the royal burgh.

NEWTON OF FALKLAND is a hamlet about midway between Falkland and Freuchie, where there is an extensive trade carried on in brewing.

FREUCHIE is a village, in the parish of and about two miles N. from Falkland. The linen manufacture is carried on here to a considerable extent, the inhabitants being principally employed in weaving linen goods. An United Presbyterian and a quoad sacra church are in the village; the latter, recently erected, is a very fine edifice. There is also a public school. Population in 1871, 1,195.

INVERKEITHING,

WITH THE PARISH OF DALGETTY, AND THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF NORTH QUEENSFERRY, ST. DAVID'S, FORDELL, HILLEND, JAMES TOWN AND ROSYTH.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh, a seaport, and the capital of its parish; 11 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 80 s. from Perth, 13 s.w. from Kirkcaldy, and 4 s.e. from Dunfermline. It is most agreeably situated at the inner side of a bay of the Frith of Forth, on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about 2 miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c., and on a railway from Edinburgh to Dunfermline, via Queensferry. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picturesque in the scenery of Mid-Lothian; Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and fine buildings, lofty spires and towering monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs, while the passing and re-passing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I., Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received a charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are coeval with the earliest periods of Scottish history. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still resists the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth; The rock on which it stands is connected with the mainland by a causeway, and a stone slab, placed in the wall over what appears to have been the principal entrance, bears the date of 1661. In Sir Walter Scott's novel of the Abbot, this castle is alluded to, and tradition points it out as being the th-place of the wife of Oliver Cromwell. It is now the property of the Earl of Hopetoun, whose noble mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in opposite magnificence, and the other a mighty skeleton. The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are well paved and gas lighted; improvements greatly have been made, and the thoroughfares display some excellent and well furnished shops. There is a town house, which comprises a gaol and suitable apartments for the courts. The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming charters of earlier but unknown dates; a number of intervening charters were confirmed by one from James VI., in 1593. The government is vested in a provost, or sheriff, two bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer, elected by the councillors. The expense of paving, lighting and cleansing is defrayed from the Corporation funds. The burgh, in conjunction with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross, and South Queensferry, sends one member to the Imperial Parliament. Besides the usual trades found in a respectable country town, there are engineering and boiler works, fire-clay works, salt works, and tanning, rope making and wood shipbuilding at other businesses; connected with the latter branch is a patent slip, of great use in repairing vessels. An Act has been passed for constructing a high level bridge over the Forth at Queensferry, under which ships can sail. Two of the spans of this gigantic undertaking will be 1,550 feet each in length, and having a height of 150 feet above high water at spring tides. Free-stone and whinstone are abundant in this neighbourhood, and of excellent quality, and considerable quantities of each are annually exported. The harbour is capacious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds. The private harbour of East Ness affords additional accommodation, and gives about 18 feet of water at spring tides. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established at Inverkeithing, affording great convenience to the monetary transactions of the commercial inhabitants. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and one for an United Presbyterian congregation. There is a large public school under the School Board, in which the languages, mathematics, and the usual branches of education are taught. A fair is held on the first Friday in August. The entire parish of Inverkeithing contained in 1871 a population of 8,074; of this number the town had 1,768. In 1881 the population of the town was 1,846.

HILLEND, JAMES TOWN AND ROSYTH are hamlets in the parish of Inverkeithing. At the latter place are the ruins of Rosyth Castle. A Board school for Dalgetty is situated at the eastern of Hillend.

NORTH QUEENSFERRY, formerly in the parish of Inverkeithing, but now annexed to Dunfermline, is 2 miles s. from Inverkeithing, and is well known to travellers as the port and point of land opposite to Queensferry (or South Queensferry), in Linlithgowshire, and a steamer passes between the two several times daily. A short distance to the west of the village is the anchorage ground, resorted to by vessels in stress of weather or contrary winds, called "Saint Margaret's Hope." Here is a station of the coast-guard, and it is a fishing one for a kind of sprat, of which prodigious quantities are taken. Here are large whinstone quarries, employing a number of men. Population in 1871, 882.

DALGETTY is a parish five miles in length, and from one to three and a half in breadth. It is bounded on the north by Dunfermline, on the east by Aberdour, on the south by the river Forth, and on the west by Inverkeithing. The surrounding district is rich in coal, of which great quantities are exported from St. David's. In this parish are the ruins of Fordell Castle (erected in 1111), with its beautiful grounds and waterfall, well worthy of notice from the tourist; also Donibristle, the seat of the Earl of Moray, beautifully situated on the Frith of Forth, commanding a splendid sea view. Its park is one of the finest in Scotland. There are two public schools in the parish. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,310.

Saint David's is a small port in the parish of Dalgetty, and about a mile and a half to the east of Inverkeithing. The rise of this place may be mainly ascribed to the advantages it affords for the shipment of coal, brought from the extensive collieries at Fordell, by means of a private railway five miles in length. At the pier here, which has been extended at a cost of from £4,000 to £5,000, upwards of 500 tons of coal can be shipped daily; and there is an average depth of eighteen feet at high water—being greater than that of any other port on this part of the coast, and which will admit vessels of upwards of six hundred tons to receive their cargoes at the pier; it is the property of George William Mercer Henderson, Esq.

Fordell is a village in the parish of Dalgetty, about a mile south east of Crossgates, its postal district, on the property of George William Mercer Henderson, Esq., and is chiefly inhabited by miners employed on the estate. It has a fine reading room which has been provided for the use of the workmen. Population in 1871, 641.

KETTLE AND LADYBANK,

WITH CULTS, COLLESSIE AND PITLESSIE.

KETTLE is a parish and village, about eight miles in length, and three miles in breadth, and embracing 7,612 acres, the latter 17 miles s. from Dundee, four from Falkland, and about one mile from Ladybank, its post town, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Edinburgh to Cupar, nearly six miles from the latter town. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway passes through the village, at which there is a station. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Calul, or Katul, and in common phraseology it is invariably entitled "the Kettle." At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife; it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of the northern side. The manufacture of linen is the principal trade carried on here. The church, which is a handsome building with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the Established church, there is an United Presbyterian church. A large public school was erected in 1866, at a cost of about £3,000, calculated to supply all the educational wants of the parish. In 1871 the population of Kettle parish was 2,923, and that of the village 643. In this parish, about half a mile from the village, is the hamlet of BALMALCOLM, where there is a Free church.

CULTS is a parish two miles and a half in length and one and a half in breadth, and embraces 2,924 acres, situated about three miles from Ladybank, its post town, two miles from Kettle, and five miles from Cupar. The parish is chiefly in the "Howe of Fife," on the south banks of the Eden, having Ceres on the east, Kettle on the west, Monimail on the north, and Scoonie and Kennoway on the south. It abounds in coal, lime and freestone, and is generally well cultivated and enclosed. The principal ornaments of this district are the mansion house and beautifully disposed pleasure grounds and plantations of Crawford Priory, which is on the north side of the road to Cupar. Wilkie, the justly celebrated painter, was a native of the parish, his father having been minister of Cults. The ancient name of the parish was Guthkes, which signifies a nook, or corner, it being disjointed from the large strath which runs from east to west along the banks of the Eden. Population in 1871, 767.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults, two miles from Kettle; situated on the road between Kirkealdy and Cupar. Four miles from the latter town, and about three miles from Ladybank, its post town. The occupation of the inhabitants is of the same nature as that of those of Kettle. There is a public school here which has recently been enlarged, and serves for the whole of the parish. Population in 1871, 401.

COLLESSIE, a Gaelic word signifying bottom of a glen, is a parish lying to the north of that of Kettle, four miles therefrom, and three miles from Ladybank, its post town. It is eight miles in length by five in breadth, and is bounded on the north by Abdie, on the south by Kettle, on the west by Auchtermuchty, and on the east by Monimail, consisting chiefly of fine enclosed lands, and some fine plantations rising from the Eden to the hills on the north. The village, of no importance in the way of business, is situated three miles from Auchtermuchty and six from Cupar, near to two roads which cross each other, the one leading from Newburgh to Kirkealdy, the other from Cupar to Kinross. The railway before-mentioned passes through it. The parish church is a neat building, surmounted by a spire. There is also a public school here. Acreage, 8,699. Population in 1871, 1,703.

LADYBANK is a village in the above parish, and is of great importance, being a junction station of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British Railway, also the post-town for this part of the county. The chief business is linen manufacturing. Malting is carried on here to a great extent. A new Free church, with spire, was erected here in 1876, and an Established church has also just been built. There is also a public school.

KILCONQUHAR,

WITH BARNYARDS, EARLSFERRY, COLINSBURGH AND ELIE.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, extending in an oblong form between seven and eight miles from north to south, and varying from two to nearly five miles in breadth. It is bounded on the north by Ceres and Cameron, on the south by Elie and the Frith of Forth, on the east by Carnbee, and on the east by Newburn and Largo. The East of Fife branch of the North British Railway passes about half a mile west of the village. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast. The flat part of the south is a sandy soil, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarres, the residence of Sir Coutts Lindsay, Bart., is the chief; and there are other elegant mansions also deserving notice. Kilconquhar loch is a fine sheet of water, three-quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour many swans and wild fowls. This parish contains five villages, namely, KILCONQUHAR, BARNYARDS, COLINSBURGH, LARGOWARD, and EARLSFERRY. The latter, which is a royal burgh, is on the sea coast, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, three from Colinsburgh, and close to the village of Elie. The date of its erection into a royal burgh is uncertain, as its earliest charter was destroyed by a fire in Edinburgh, but a new one was in consequence granted by James IV., by which all its ancient privileges were renewed and confirmed. It is governed by a chief magistrate, one baillie, a treasurer, and seven councillors. The chief branch of industry is handloom weaving for distant linen manufacturers, otherwise the place is of little importance. The entire parish of Kilconquhar comprises an area of 6,691 statute acres, and had a population in 1871 of 2,018, and in 1881, 2,068, whilst the town contained 350 of that number at the latter date; at the same period, Earlsferry contained 286, and Largoward 893.

COLINSBURGH is a village of some trade, situate one mile from Kilconquhar, having a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, a good inn, and several well-furnished shops. It was originally built by Colin, third Earl of Balcarres, who died in 1732, and it is named after him. Besides the parish church at Kilconquhar there is an United Presbyterian chapel at Colinsburgh, and a Board school. In the village a weekly corn market is held on Thursdays. Population in 1871, 351, and in 1881, 382.

ELIE is a small parish, containing the village of its own name. It is bounded on the north by Kilconquhar, on the south by the Frith of Forth, on the east by St. Monance, and on the west by Largo and Newburn. Its length is about two miles, and breadth one mile. The whole, which is enclosed, is the property of William Baird, Esq. whose elegant residence, Elie House, is situated a little to the north of the village. The grounds are beautifully wooded, and are laid out with great taste, and deserve notice. The village of Elie is at the head of Elie bay, six miles E. from Largo, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, two miles and a half from Colinsburgh, and the same distance from St. Monance. It is a station on the East of Fife branch of the North British Railway, which passes a little north of the village, which stands so near the sea that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The harbour is said to be the deepest on the Frith of Forth, except that of Burntisland. The beach is here very fine and sandy; and on one portion of it a species of garnet is found. Many persons resort here in the summer from distant parts to enjoy the bathing, which is excellent; another great source of attraction to visitors is the golfing links at Earlsferry. An elegant club house has lately been built, and the links are largely frequented by players from all quarters. At some earlier period the village must have been a place of more importance than it is now, for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and an Independent chapel. A handsome and commodious Board school and master's residence are situated north of the town. The trade of the place is confined to the export of grain and potatoes; there is a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and at Earlsferry village, which joins with Elie, the weaving of ticks and checks for distant houses is the chief employment and support of its inhabitants. Population in 1871, 779.

KINGHORN

Is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh and parish, 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles north from Edinburgh, three south from Kirkcaldy, and two and a half from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Firth of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith, and on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch of the North British Railway. There are two principal streets in the town, one running from east to west, and the other from south to north. An elegant edifice answers the purpose of a town house. Another public erection worthy of notice is a handsome school house; it contains school rooms and a library and museum. There is also a branch of the British Linen Company's Bank established here. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I., and about that time it is said to have been a royal residence. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and five councillors. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, returns one member to Parliament, the present member being Sir George Campbell, B.C.S.I., of Edenwood, Fifeshire. Near the town is a neglected mineral spring, the water of which was highly recommended by the celebrated Dr. Anderson, physician to Charles I. All around the country is fine, with a splendid outlook to the sea, and distant view of the south country beyond the Forth. The branches of trade carried on here are flax spinning, for which Messrs. Swan Brothers have two mills; the manufacture of glue on an extensive scale by Messrs. John Darney & Sons, and iron ship building by Messrs. John Key and Sons, each of whom employ a large number of hands. The harbour has fallen to decay, and the nearest now is about half a mile distant, at Petty-Cur, which for many years was the ferry place for Edinburgh, now transferred to Burntisland. The island of INCHKEITH, distant about three miles from Petty-Cur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a lighthouse, with a revolving light, on the highest point of and standing 235 feet above the sea level. Certain writers say Inchkeith was so called from an old noble family, named Keith, others go farther back into the mists of antiquity and connect it with Guidi. Here, it is supposed, was raised the town or fortress of Gnida, described by Bede, more than eleven hundred years ago, as situated in the middle of the great arm of the sea which runs into Britain from the east. About the year 700, a church or monastery, founded by St. Adamnan, successor to St. Columba, in the abbey of Iona, was erected on the island. Inchkeith was seized by the English in 1547, and a fort was built on it, which was taken by the French during the regency of Mary, queen of James V. A curious experiment was tried on Inchkeith by James IV. In order to discover the natural and original language of the human race, he sent two infants, under the charge of a dumb woman, to reside there until the children should arrive at mature age. No authentic record has been handed down to us, but it has been said that they spoke good Hebrew when they grew up. About a mile to the eastward of Kinghorn is the Kirkcaldy Combination Poorhouse for the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn; it occupies a commanding situation near the coast. Further particulars will be found in the account of Kirkcaldy. We may also state for the curious, that this poorhouse was the first institution of the kind assessed for the poor rates in Scotland. The case arose in consequence of the other three parishes refusing to pay the rates assessed by the parishes of Kinghorn, and after being brought before the Lord Ordinary, was, upon appeal, carried to the second division of the court of session, and a decree given in favour of Kinghorn, the expenses in the case, amounting to nearly £300, being defrayed by the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, and Burntisland. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel. There are also commodious public schools situated in the centre of the town. The entire parish of Kinghorn contains an acreage of 5,212, and in 1871 possessed a population of 3,393, of which number 1,739 were returned for the town. The numbers for 1881 were 3,584 and 1,806 respectively.

KIRKCALDY,

WITH ABBOTSHALL, AUCHTERTOOL, PATHHEAD, SINCLAIRTOWN, AND GALLATOWN.

KIRKCALDY is a royal burgh of very ancient date, the seat of a presbytery, a populous thriving sea port, and the capital of its parish, 14 miles N. from Edinburgh, 38 s.w. from Dundee, and 6 from Burntisland (all rail distances), on the North British Railway (Edinburgh, Perth & Dundee line), the station of which is contiguous to the town. It is situated on the northern shore of the Frith of Forth, and stretches along the base of a range of rising grounds to the extent of upwards of three miles. By a recent act of Parliament the suburbs of Abbotshall, Pathhead, Gallatown, and Sinclairtown, are included in the boundaries of the burgh, the new boundary line thus including portions of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Kinghorn and Dysart, and the quoad sacra parishes of St. James, Inverlief and Pathhead. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which it stands, the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled "the lang toon o' Kirkcaldy," in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few narrow diverging lanes, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises many well-built cross streets and detached dwellings, the residence of the opulent classes; so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears environed by finely-enclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith (the residence of Ronald C. M. Ferguson, Esq.), and the grounds surrounding the elegant mansion of Dunnikier, the seat of James T. Oswald, Esq. The prospect from the heights is of a different, but equally delightful, character, embracing, as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Frith of Forth. From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I. erected it anew into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but in 1678 the number of vessels in its possession had decreased to twenty-five. On the return of peace in 1763, the trade of the port revived, and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels; from this period Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. The principal importations are flax, timber, grain, &c.; the exports are linen, yarn and coal. The number of vessels belonging to the port has for some years been on the decline; for the year ending 1868 there were 55 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 3,659; for the year ending 1871, 29 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 3,496; for the year ending 1875, 27 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 3,303; for the year ending 1880, 21 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,290. Fishing boats registered at port 380, tonnage 9,900. Vessels from this port were employed in the Davis Straits whale fishery for many years, but this trade is now discontinued. A branch from the main line of railway traverses the entire length of the harbour—a great convenience to operations of loading and unloading vessels. The harbour, which has been greatly improved within the last few years, is almost dry at low water, but at full tide is capable of admitting vessels of large burden. This port is the seat of a custom house having control over a considerable line of coast, extending from Aberdeen to Anstruther. The revenue of the port for the year ending March, 1883, was £31,983; for the year ending March, 1871, £34,018; and for the year 1875, £45,192; and for the year ending December 31st, 1880, was £53,151, shewing a large increase, although as shewn above the tonnage has declined considerably. The prominent trade of Kirkcaldy and neighbourhood bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax, tow, jute, and the weaving of linen goods for home & foreign consumption; striped hollands, dowlas, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c. are amongst the fabrics produced, and in the manufacture of which there are several extensive power-loom factories in full operation; there are also several bleaching fields and dyeworks, and three china and earthenware manufactories, where a superior class of goods is made. Kirkcaldy is now the centre of the floor cloth and linoleum manufacture of the kingdom; there are seven factories employing about 1,000 men and boys. Marine engines are made here, and at Kinghorn there is a large shipbuilding yard connected with Messrs. Key's engineering establishment. The other branches include brewing, brass and ironfounding, machine making, and a considerable corn and meal trade. The general commerce of the place is assisted by resident branches of five banking establishments—namely, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited (who have also each a branch at Sinclairtown), the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company. There is also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank, and branches of the Money Order Bank, Limited. There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods, and there is a good hotel. The streets are well paved and lighted with gas. The celebrated Adam Smith, author of "The Wealth of Nations," was born here in the year 1723. The civic government of the town is vested in a town council, consisting of thirty-four members, of whom one is provost and admiral of the burgh and harbour, four bailies, one dean of guild, and one treasurer. The council are also commissioners of police under the General Police Act, and local authority under the Health Act. The management of the harbour is vested in a board of commissioners, fourteen in number, consisting of the provost and bailies. The burgh is conjoined with Kinghorn, Dysart, and Burntisland in sending one member to Parliament; the present member is Sir George Campbell. In 1829 a handsome building of large dimensions was completed to supersede the old town house; it contains a hall for burgh and district meetings, a burgh court and record rooms, an office for the town clerk, and other apartments. The sheriff holds a circuit court on the fourth Monday of every month, under the Small Debts Act; and the justices of the peace likewise sit on fourth Monday monthly, for adjudicating claims under other pecuniary acts. A new Corn Exchange is situated in Cowan street, the first stone of which was laid with masonic honours in May, 1859. The combination poorhouse is a conspicuous building, beautifully situated on the lands of Abden, in the parish of Kinghorn, commanding an extensive view of the Firth of Forth. It was erected in 1849, is capable of accommodating 150 inmates, and was opened for their reception in May, 1850. The total cost considerably exceeded £5,000. It is the joint property of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Burntisland, and Kinghorn, nearly half being held by the parish of Kirkcaldy.

The parish church of Kirkcaldy, which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are the parish churches of Inveriel, Abbotshall, St. James, and Pathhead, six Free churches, three United Presbyterian churches, one Episcopalian, one Independent, three Baptist, and the Roman Catholic chapel. The principal educational establishments consist of two handsome schools recently erected by the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Kirkcaldy, at a cost of about £10,000, and capable of containing upwards of 1,100 pupils; the old burgh schools of Kirkcaldy, having room for upwards of 400 pupils (this school includes a division for teaching the higher branches of education under a rector and two assistants); and three schools under the charge of the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Dysart, capable of accommodating about 900 pupils. There are also three schools established under the will of the late Robert Philp, Esq. of Edenshead, for instructing children of both sexes selected from amongst the poorest inhabitants; these schools can accommodate 600 pupils. The property bequeathed by this gentleman for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. The pupils are admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and are taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum is allowed for clothing each pupil. There is also a charitable trust by John Thomson, for educating poor children, and for annuities for the support of poor inhabitants. There are also several private seminaries for the education of the wealthier classes. There is a working men's club and reading room, and a subscription library. A weekly paper of general news is published on Wednesday, and two on Saturday. The market, which is a stock market for the sale of grain, and is the most important in the county, is held on Saturday. The parish of Kirkcaldy embraces an area of 1,177 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 7,093; the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 12,422. The numbers for 1881 were: for the parish, 8,647, and for the burgh, 15,055.

ABBOTSHALL, although a distinct parish, is now included in the burgh of Kirkcaldy, as before mentioned. Its principal street, called Links street (nearly a mile long), runs west in a direct line with the High street of the town named. The trade and manufacture are of the same character as those of Kirkcaldy; and more immediately in Abbotshall are dye works, an earthenware manufactory, and a large corn mill. The places of worship are Established and Free churches; and the schools are parochial, "Philp's Institution," and subscription. The general appearance of the parish, the extent of which is about two miles either way, is very agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward, into tolerably high grounds. Raith House, before noticed, is in this parish. Acreage, 4,135. Population in 1871, 5,785, and in 1881, 6,237.

PATHHEAD, now included in the burgh as before noticed, is situated chiefly on the face of a hill, looking towards the Firth of Forth, and is joined by two other districts, respectively named GALLATOWN and SINCLAIRTOWN, also in the same burgh. The manufacture of linen goods is briskly followed in these places. Dowlas, ticks, sheeting, &c. of excellent quality, are produced both by hand and power; flax spinning is also carried on to some extent, and in Pathhead there are two floor-cloth manufactories and also one for linoleum. At Sinclairtown is an earthenware manufactory and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and at Pathhead is a branch of the National Bank of Scotland Limited. The places of worship are an Established church, two Free churches, and a meeting house for Baptists. The means of education are not wanting, a commodious school house having been erected in Pathhead some years since by the trustees of the late Robert Philp, Esq. of Edenshead; and in 1849, an auxiliary parochial or subscription school was opened, also a subscription school in Sinclairtown, and one in Gallatown, in all of which a sound and useful education is imparted.

AUCHTERTOOL is a small inland parish and village, the latter situated four miles west from Kirkcaldy and about the same distance from Kinghorn, and in the midst of a beautifully diversified landscape, bounded on the north by Abbotshall, on the south by Kinghorn, on the east by Auchterderran, and on the west by Beath. Its length is seven miles and its breadth one mile and a half. Agriculture is the principal pursuit of the inhabitants, there not being any kind of manufacture or trade in the place, except a distillery. There is an Established church and a Board school here. From a little lake, called Camillaloch, in this parish, the river Teel takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or "Hallyards." Auchterteel is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teel. The acreage of the parish is 2,738, the population in 1871 being 529, and in 1881, 706.

LARGO (UPPER AND NETHER),

LUNDIN MILL, AND THE PARISH OF NEWBURN.

LARGO parish lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, between Newburn and Kilconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west—its inland quarters being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains three villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTON of) LARGO, NETHER LARGO, and LUNDIN MILL; the first is situated a mile from the sea, on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—three miles from the former, nine from the latter, eleven from St. Andrews, nine from Cupar, and twelve from Kirkcaldy. Its length from north to south is nearly four miles and a half, and its average breadth three miles. The general surface is diversified by running hills and valleys, interspersed with various small woods. The most striking feature in the landscape is Largo Law, a conical hill, with a double summit covered with verdure to upwards of 900 feet above the sea. From its top a splendid view of the Frith of Forth, with its islands, and the opposite shore of the Lothians, is obtained. Almost the whole of the land is in a high state of cultivation. At Lower Largo are the net manufacturing works of Mr. David Gillies, also the oil works of Messrs. David Russell & Co. The minerals are coal and limestone, the latter being most excellent in quality, and, until recently, was extensively wrought. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birth place of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who, in the reign of James IV., defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull, and otherwise defended the shores of Scotland at his own private expense. The East of Fife Branch of the North British Railway Company, passes within a short distance of the village of Lower Largo, where there is a station. A hospital, which stands in the village of Kirkton, was erected by means of an endowment by a Mr. John Wood, a native of the place; it is a handsome building, in the Gothic style. The intention of the founder was one of a peculiar nature—any man "of the name of Wood" may have admission here, to whatever part of Scotland he may belong. The foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per annum. The National Bank of Scotland, Limited has a branch, and a Savings Bank is also established. Both Upper and Nether Largo are favourite resorts for sea bathing, and attract a great number of visitors in the bathing season. George Johnston, Esq., of Lathrisk, is lord of the manor, and principal landowner. In 1871 the parish of Largo had a population of 2,318, and in 1881, 1,948.

NETHER LARGO is a fishing village in the parish of Largo, one mile s.w. from Upper Largo, seated at the head of an indentation of the Frith of Forth, called Largo Bay; it stands at the efflux of a rivulet named the Kell, whose estuary forms a harbour to the place. This village would have remained amongst the most obscure of coast villages but from the circumstance of its having been the birth place of Alexander Selkirk, rendered famous by the pen of De Foë as "Robinson Crusoe." The house in which Selkirk was born stood here, but from its decayed state was demolished. It was an ordinary cottage of one storey and a garret, and was stationed on the north side of the main street of Largo. A descendant of this person of the name of Catherine Selkirk, was resident in this village until her death, which occurred in 1863. The weaving of linen goods occupies several of the inhabitants of these villages. In the parish are edifices for congregations of the Established and Free churches, and Baptists and United Presbyterians. With the churches schools are connected. On the east bank of the Kell are the ruins of the ancient castle of Bacteruie.

LUNDIN MILL is a village one mile N.W. of Nether Largo, in the parish of Largo, and is inhabited chiefly by weavers, with the exception of a few handsome villas at Lundin Links, where there is a station on the Leven and East of Fife Railway. It is a place of great antiquity. The house of Lundin was recently taken down; the square tower, which formed part of the ancient castle of Lundin, still remains. It was formerly the residence of a family of that name, who held property of great extent in the district as early as the reign of David II. Here also are the three "STANDING STANES OF LUNDIN." They are supposed to have once formed part of a Druidical temple, and to have occupied their present site for about 2,000 years. Population in 1871, 537, and in 1881, 386.

NEWBURN is a parish lying two miles east of Largo, bounded on the north by Kilconquhar, on the south by Largo Bay, on the east by Elie, and on the west by Largo. Its length is three miles and breadth one mile and a half. About three-fourths of the land is under cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish being quite rural, the inhabitants depend upon agriculture for employment. There is a parish church and school. In accordance with a bequest of Mr. John Wood, the parochial teacher receives an additional emolument sufficient for the board and education of six boys of the name of Wood, who enter at the age of seven and leave at fifteen. Population in 1871, 362, and in 1881, 314.

POST OFFICE, UPPER LARGO, John Marr, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive at nine morning and seven evening, and are despatched at half-past six morning and four afternoon.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

* Letters for Newburn and Lundin Mill should be addressed "near LARGO, FIFESHIRE," and for Largo should be addressed "FIFESHIRE."

LESLIE,

WITH THE PARISH OF KINGLASSIE.

LESLIE is a parish and burgh of barony, containing the manufacturing town of its own name, twelve miles E. from Kinross, the like distance S.W. from Cupar, nine N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and three W. from Markinch. Its length is upwards of four miles, and its breadth three miles. It is seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and a shallow vale on the northern side, and situated on a public road up the vale of Leven, leading into Kinross-shire. The town consists principally of one street, running from east to west. It is a very ancient place, often frequented by James when holding court at Falkland; and here is the scene laid of the song of the "Jolly Beggars." Of its age, the irregularity of the streets, the architecture of the houses (being built with the gable ends to the street) are proofs. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty; the streets of the town are gas-lighted. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public green, of a triangular figure; in former times this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting for the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last sixty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled. This increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of linens, flax spinning, paper making, and bleaching; the works of these are chiefly established on the banks of the Leven. A branch railway runs from the west end of the town to join the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway at Markinch. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland Limited was opened here in 1850. Leslie is governed by two bailies and fifteen councillors. The Right Hon. the Countess of Rothes has a seat (Leslie House) at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure grounds and agreeable plantations. The places of worship are the parish church, which has recently been rebuilt; a Free church, and two United Presbyterian churches. The Established church has 1,300 names on its Communion roll, and its Sabbath school is attended by 500 children, conducted by 50 teachers. There are two public schools in the parish. There is also a library established under the title of the "Leslie Institute Library." It consists of upwards of 1,000 volumes of valuable books. One of the rules of the library is that it can never be dissolved, its laws being like those of the Medes and Persians, unalterable. The inhabitants of Leslie have for years taken pride to themselves for their upright dealing. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of April, and on the first Friday in October. The April fair is considered to be the largest in the county of Fife. The parish of Leslie has an area of 5,028 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 4,294.

KINGLASSIE is a parish extending four miles in length by two in breadth at its narrowest part and four at its broadest, embracing 7,717 acres. It is bounded on the north by Leslie, on the south by Auchterderran, on the east by Markinch, and on the west by Portmout. It is watered by the Lochty and the Ore, tributary streams of the Leven. On the first of these stands the irregular village of Kinglassie, which is three miles from Leslie and three and a half N.E. from Lochgelly. The inhabitants of the village are principally supported by agriculture and the linen factory of Messrs. David Lornie and Sons. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. A fair is entitled to be held on the third Wednesday in May, and on the Thursday before Michaelmas (o.s.) Population of the parish in 1871, 1,082.

LEVEN,

WITH INNER LEVEN AND THE PARISH OF SCOONIE.

LEVEN is a town in the parish of Scoonie, nine miles from Kirkcaldy, four from Wemyss, and three from Largo, situate on the coast of the Frith of Forth, on the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of three principal streets, irregularly built, but contains some good houses, with several lanes and detached mansions. A number of elegant villas are situated at the Links, a little to the east of the town, and several handsome mansions are in the neighbourhood. A line of railway, the East of Fife branch, from Thornton station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, gives the town the benefit and facility for that mode of transit; this branch railway is now extended east to Anstruther. The town has also the benefit of a harbour. A new dock has been constructed at a cost of about £40,000 by the Leven Harbour Co. Limited, incorporated by Act of Parliament under the "Leven Harbour Act, 1876." It is 500 feet long by 250 feet broad, with a depth of water on the sill of 14 feet, and vessels have been loaded here up to 800 tons. It was opened in January, 1880. It is proposed to obtain powers to wind up the present company, to create a Harbour Trust, and to build a new dock and breakwater at a probable cost of £150,000, the dock to be $6\frac{1}{2}$ acres in extent, with 22 feet of water on the sill. The principal imports are flax, tow, barley, and timber. The town is greatly improved, and its trade augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of INNER LEVEN, is a handsome stone bridge. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, the weaving of linen, and seed crushing, the mills of the former, especially, employing a considerable number of hands. The Durie ironfoundry, a concern long established, is very extensive, and produces specimens of work that may compete with any of a similar kind in Scotland. Close to the town are the Hawkslaw Works of Messrs. Small and Bouse, hemp and flax spinners, who employ upwards of 400 hands. A bone dust mill, corn mills, bleach fields, the manufacture of bricks and tiles, and rope making, are the other leading branches carried on here and in the vicinity. There are three branch banking houses, and several fire and life agency offices. During the summer months Leven is the resort of a number of respectable families from London, Edinburgh, and the interior, for the benefit of sea bathing. The Caledonian Hotel, the principal of the kind, affords superior accommodation either to families, tourists, or commercial gentlemen; to it has been added a large posting establishment. Leven is a burgh of barony, and has now a chief and junior magistrate. The purposes of lighting, cleaning, and water are carried out in the burgh by commissioners appointed under the General Police Act for Scotland, which was some time ago adopted here. The sheriff holds a small debt circuit court here every three months, namely, the Friday after the second Monday in January, April, and July, and Friday after the first Monday of October. The Greig Institute is a substantial building, of chaste design, erected in 1878, by public subscription. It contains news room, library, billiard room, and class room for technical subjects under Government examination. The scheme originated as a People's Institute, and its name and history are associated with Mr. Greig, of Glencarse, who gave the site and £1,000 towards the building fund. There are a number of handsome houses and cottages on the Links at the south part of the town, where there are some fine open downs, on which several golfing societies exercise in that healthy amusement, and annually play for gold and silver medals. There is also an excellent bowling green at the Links. In the summer time the district is a great resort for sea bathing, and many of the inhabitants let their houses furnished for the season. Population given with the parish.

SCOONIE is a parish on the west coast of the county. It is bounded on the north by Kennoway, on the south by the Frith of Forth, on the east by Largo, and on the west by Wemyss. Its length from north to south is five miles, and its greatest breadth is two miles and a half. The surface inland rises with a gradual ascent to an elevation of 600 feet, and there are several heights which command extensive views of the Frith of Forth and the Lothians. The land generally is in a high state of cultivation. The minerals are ochre and coal. It contains the town of Leven, which is a burgh of barony. The parish church stands close to the town, a Free church, an United Presbyterian, and an Episcopal church are the other places of worship. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in April, the first Thursday in July, and the third Wednesday in October. The parish comprises an area of 4,091 statute acres, and had a population in 1871 of 8,168, and in 1881 8,708, and of this number 3,040 were returned for the town of Leven.

LIMEKILNS,

BRUCEHAVEN, AND CHARLESTOWN.

LIMEKILNS with BRUCEHAVEN is a small seaport, in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town, three miles south of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. It was at one period a place of considerable trade, but at the present day its excellent harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of vessels. Ship-building is carried on at Brucehaven shipyard, and several owners of vessels employed in the coasting trade are resident here. There is a congregation of United Presbyterians and a public school here. Population in 1871, 758.

CHARLESTOWN is a village a short distance from Limekilns, and also in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town, from which it is four miles distant. It is the property of the Earl of Elgin, who formed a commodious harbour and extensive lime works in the vicinity; from hence enormous quantities of lime are exported annually; it is likewise the shipping port for several of the adjacent collieries. The accommodation found at the harbour here for loading and unloading vessels is most excellent. A manufactory for salt and an iron foundry are among the other businesses of this flourishing little place. There is also a public school here. Population in 1871, 749.

POST OFFICE, CHARLESTOWN, George Blyth, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Dunfermline) at five minutes past eight and half-past eleven morning, and are despatched thereto at five morning and at two afternoon.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, LIMEKILNS, Elizabeth Barber, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Dunfermline) at twenty-five minutes past eight morning and a quarter before twelve noon, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past five morning and twenty minutes before two afternoon.

Money Order Office at CHARLESTOWN.

* * Letters from Brucehaven and the above places should be addressed "near DUNFERMLINE."

LOCHGELLY,

WITH AUCHTERDERRAN, BEATH, BALLINGRY, COWDENBEATH, KELTY AND OAKFIELD.

LOCHGELLY is a police burgh and rising village in the parish of Auchterderran, eight miles N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and the same distance E. from Dunfermline. About 1½ miles distant are the ruins of the castle of Lochore. There is a station three-quarters of a mile from Lochgelly on the Dunfermline Branch of the North British Railway. Close thereto are the works and offices of the Lochgelly Iron and Coal Company, who work both of these minerals extensively. At the works are four furnaces for smelting. The court house is situated in Bank street. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is established in the village and there is also a respectable hotel. The places of worship are a quoad sacra church, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church and a Roman Catholic church recently built. The parish church of Auchterderran is at the hamlet of that name, about two and a half miles from Lochgelly. There are two large Board school. Population of Lochgelly in 1871, 2,406, and in 1881, 2,697.

AUCHTERDERRAN is a parish in the western part of the county, bounded by Beath and Ballingry on the west, Abbotshall and Auchtertool on the south and south-east, Dysart on the east, and Kinglassie and Portmouk on the north. It has an irregular outline, and is about four miles long from north to south, and about three miles broad. The water of Orr flows eastward through the parish, and in the southern part there is a sheet of water called Lochgelly which discharges itself by a small rivulet into that stream. Though the soil is only moderately fertile, the inhabitants apply themselves assiduously to agriculture, and have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. Most of the parish is under tillage, and the rest in pasture. A considerable bed of coal and ironstone traverses this part of the county. The former has long been celebrated for its excellent quality; the latter is of the black band variety. Lochgelly is the only village of any consequence in this parish. There is an Established church and a public school. In 1871 the entire parish of Auchterderran had a population of 4,017, and in 1881, 4,332.

POST OFFICE, LOCHGELLY (R.S.O.), James Bethune, Post Master.—Letters arrive (by railway travelling post) from Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at a quarter to nine morning and half-past six evening, and from Dunfermline and the West at half-past eight morning and ten minutes past six evening; and are despatched to Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at seven morning and twenty minutes past four afternoon, and to Dunfermline and the West at eight morning and ten minutes to six evening.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, COWDENBEATH, Archibald Thomson, Post Master.—Letters arrive (by railway travelling post) from Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at twenty minutes past eight morning, and from Dunfermline and the West at a quarter-past six morning and five evening; and are despatched to Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at a quarter before seven morning, and Edinburgh and the South at half-past one afternoon, and to Dunfermline and the West at ten morning and six evening.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, BLAIRADAM (for Kelty), Robert Shorthouse, Post Master.—Letters arrive (by railway travelling post) from Edinburgh at nine morning, and from Kinross at a quarter-past eleven morning, and are despatched at half-past seven evening.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

* * Letters for Auchterderran, Ballingry, Beath, Cardenden, Cowdenbeath, Dundonald, Kirkness, Lochore, and Shaws Mill should be addressed "near LOCHGELLY."

MARKINCH,

KENNOWAY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BALCURVIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, MILTON OF BALGONIE, STAR, THORNTON, WINDYGATES, AND WOODSIDE.

MARKINCH is a parish and post town containing the village of its own name, THORNTON, WINDYGATES, MILTON OF BALGONIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, WOODSIDE, and BALCURVIE. Markinch is a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, and is situated near the centre of the parish, at a distance of ten miles s. from Cupar, and eight N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and between six and seven miles from Leven. It occupies an open situation on a piece of irregular rising ground, and on the highest part is seated the church. A branch line of railway from the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee line connects this place with Leslie. Flax spinning and the weaving of linen are extensively carried on here; there are also paper and corn mills, a woollen manufactory, and bleach fields. The district round abounds in coal, and in the village there is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a chapel for the United Presbyterians. The parish of Markinch, which embraces 9,821 acres, is bounded by Kennoway on the east, on the west by Dysart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle; and on the south by Wemyss; it extends from north to south five miles and a half, by a mean breadth of two, its southern end being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south. It is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation, and must be ranked among the most beautiful parts of the shire; it is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Or, and the great road through the county crosses it. The Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Railway is carried over the first named river by means of a handsome viaduct of ten arches, nearly ninety feet in height. Balgonie Castle, the property of the late Charles Balfour, Esq., of Newton Don, is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some finely wooded grounds. About half a mile to the east is the seat of Admiral Bethune, of Balfour, surrounded by pleasing plantations and enclosures, and in a delightful situation. Balbirnie is a good substantial mansion, the seat of John Balfour, Esq., and lies about half a mile north-west of the village. There has just been built a spacious town hall and a good school. The village, altogether, has of late years undergone great improvement. A fair is held in July. The village of WINDYGATES, now the head of a post district, in this parish, stands on the high road between Markinch and Leven, about two miles west from the latter. Contiguous to the village is the extensive distillery of The Distillers' Company, Limited; also the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. and W. Beveridge. Close to Windygates is CAMERON BRIDGE, a station on the Leven and East of Fife Railway. A fair is held here in June. A public school has been erected, and is called Balcurvie Public School. Population of the parish in 1871 5,413, and of the village, 1,237.

WOODSIDE, in the parish of Markinch, is a small village about one and a half miles south-west from Markinch, its post town, and two from Thornton. The inhabitants are chiefly employed at the paper mills and bleachfields in the neighbourhood.

MILTOWN, or MILTON OF BALGONIE, is a village about midway between Windygates and Markinch, in the parish of Markinch, and with the exception of the large flax spinning mills of Messrs. J. G. Stuart and Co. is not deserving of particular notice. There are an Established church, a public school, and a sub-post office. Population in 1871, 396.

COALTON, or COALTON OF BALGONIE, lies one and a half miles south from Markinch, its post town and parish. The inhabitants are principally employed at the Balgonie Colliery and bleachfields in the immediate neighbourhood. There is a public school. Population in 1871, 303.

THORNTON is a village in the parish of Markinch, situated near the south-eastern extremity of the parish, and close to the THORNTON JUNCTION on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British and the Leven and East of Fife Railways. There is a joint station here. The Dysart Combination Poorhouse, erected in 1862, at a cost of about £6,000, is situated about half a mile from this village; it is a handsome stone building, capable of receiving 130 of the poor of the surrounding parishes. There are also a chapel of the Established church, a school, and a post office. Population in 1871, 526.

BALCURVIE is situated on an eminence about half a mile from Windygates, its post town, in the parish of Markinch, about three miles east from the latter place, and one mile south from Kennoway. The inhabitants are principally employed at the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. and W. Beveridge and the distillery of The Distillers' Company, Limited. Agriculture is carried on extensively. The land in and around Balcurvie is under a high state of cultivation. There is a public school here.

KENNOWAY parish, which lies to the east of Markinch, is three miles long and two broad, situated on an acclivity arising from the south to the north; it embraces 8,965 acres, and is bounded on the north by Kettle, on the south by Wemyss, on the east by Scoonie, and on the west by Markinch. It commands a delightful and extensive prospect from its southern side of the Frith of Forth, its islands, and the Lothians; while from its northern extremity the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus, and Perth, including the Grampian hills. The village of Kennoway is situated about four miles from that of Markinch and three from Leven, at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, and contain caves, which were probably used as places of refuge and retreat for marauders in ancient times. Handloom weaving and agriculture appear to be the principal pursuit of the inhabitants. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a chapel of the United Presbyterians. There is a public school, a subscription school, and a post office. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,703, and of the village, 835. About two miles from Kennoway, and one and a half from Markinch, is the village of STAR, in the former parish. It has a public school and post office. Agriculture alone supplies occupation for its inhabitants. Population of Star in 1871, 306.

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABDIE, DUNBOG, AND FLISK.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, seaport, and the capital of its parish, 33 miles N. from Edinburgh, 15 miles S.W. from Dundee, 11 S.E. from Perth, 10 N.W. from Cupar, and 5 N. from Auctermuchty, situated on the line of the North British Railway, and on the south bank of the Tay. It consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandise, and a spacious harbour; the Tay above mentioned being navigable only for vessels of about two hundred tons, those of greater burthen put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. That the town is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable; according to some authorities its origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey of Lindores, founded in 1173, by David, Earl of Huntingdon, on his return from the Holy Land. The unfortunate Duke of Rothsay, who was starved to death in Falkland Palace, was buried here. The ruins are a little eastward of the town. Several stone coffins have at different times been discovered, and are still to be seen. The name of New-burgh is supposed to be conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The town hall stands near the centre of the town, and the parish church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome edifice, erected in 1833, and dedicated to St. Catherine. In the year 1266 the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1631 Charles I. granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh, in virtue of which grant Newburgh is said to have sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates, but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honours. There is, however, at the present time, no evidence of it ever having sent a member to the Scottish parliament. There are two ancient crosses within the parish, one at Mugdrum, about thirteen feet high, and the Macduff cross, or rather the pedestal of it, of great interest, from its having been granted to Macduff as a sanctuary for his successful aid against Macbeth. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and fifteen councillors, with a treasurer and a town clerk. Within the last fifty years, Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. There is a branch banking establishment—the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a Savings Bank in connection with the bank. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple trade of the place, exclusive of which the trade in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable; of the former especially large exports are made. The benefits derived from the salmon fishery and from the sale of fruit also add considerably to the welfare of the place. To the parish of Newburgh many interesting particulars belong, which the reader will find amply detailed in Messrs. Chambers' excellent Gazetteer, and also in the history of Newburgh by Alexander Laing, Esq. F.S.A. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a Baptist chapel. There are several schools in the parish, including the public school, the pupils of which, in addition to the ordinary branches, are taught Latin and mathematics. Another school, a neat and handsome building, conducted on the Madras principle, was erected some years ago at the east end of the town, with funds from Dr. Bell's trust, private subscriptions, and Government aid. Fairs are held on the third Friday in June, and on the first Tuesday in December. The principal landowners are Edmund Balfour P. Hay, Esq. of Mugdrum, and Robert Cathcart, Esq. of Pitcairnie. The entire parish of Newburgh has an area of 1,385 acres, and had a population in 1871 of 2,529, and in 1881, 2,183.

ABDIE parish, which is of considerable extent, but greatly intersected by other parishes, lies on the south bank of the river Tay amongst those highlands to the westward, which have acquired the appellation of the Ochil hills. The surface is remarkably uneven, but the soil is in general fertile. It possesses three quarries of whinstone, of which considerable quantities are shipped for paving the streets of London. The parish is well watered with lochs, the chief of which is the Loch of Lindores, about a mile in length and of irregular breadth. This piece of water is well stored with fish, and being surrounded by some romantic scenery is a beautiful object in the view of the country. There is a parish church and handsome public school. MOUNT PLEASANT, GLENBURNIE, and LINDORES are hamlets in this parish. Acreage, 6,371. Population in 1871, 1,164, and in 1881, 966.

DUNBOG is a small parish, three miles long and one mile broad, situated four miles and a half from Newburgh and six miles from Cupar, bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Moonzie, and on the west by Abdie. It consists of a valley lying between two ridges of the Ochil hills; the soil is of a rich black mould, which produces abundant crops of every description. There is a parish church and a handsome public school, the latter adorned with clock and bell. Acreage, 2,324. Population in 1871, 220.

FLISK is a parish stretching five miles on the banks of the Tay. It is six miles east from Newburgh and eight miles from Cupar. It is bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Creich and Abdie, on the east by Balmerino, and on the west by Dunbog. The soil, although of a clayey nature, is nevertheless fertile and well cultivated from the shore of the river to the Ochil hills, a portion of which are situated in this parish. There is a church and public school in the parish. Acreage, 2,614. Population in 1871, 280, and in 1881, 259.

NEWPORT,

WITH FORGAN, BALMERINO, AND GAULDREY.

NEWPORT, a handsome village in the parish of Forgan, stretching along the river side, is picturesquely situated, directly opposite to Dundee, about two miles therefrom, and three miles s. w. from Tayport, the ground sloping upwards to a considerable height from the river frontage. Many elegant villas have recently been erected in it; and as there is a constant communication with Dundee by means of the steamers, which ply hourly, and the climate salubrious and comparatively mild, it is fast becoming a popular suburb of Dundee. Newport possesses four handsome churches, a commodious public hall, erected at a cost of £4,000, and a Board school, built in 1878, to accommodate upwards of 400 scholars. The railway, which was made to connect Tayport with the Tay bridge, passes through Newport and has a station here. The south end of the Tay bridge is at Wormit, about a mile to the west of Newport.
Population in 1871, East Newport, 894; West Newport, 615.

FORGAN parish extends for about four miles in length and about two and a half miles in breadth, along the south bank of the river Tay, exactly opposite the town of Dundee, and comprises 4,933 acres. It is bounded by Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Balmerino on the west, and Leuchars and Kilmany on the south. The parish church of Forgan is nearly two miles inland, being ten miles from Cupar and the same distance from St. Andrews. There is also a Board school. The landward part of the parish is richly wooded and well cultivated. The mansion house of St. Fort, standing out conspicuously in the landscape, is in this parish; and about one mile west from Newport is the small harbour of WOODHAVEN. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,243.

BALMERINO, or Balmerinocn (pronounced Ba'mernie), is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Tay, from 5½ to 6 miles from Newport, extending about three and a half miles in length and two and a half in breadth. The surface is a gradual decline to the side of the river. The harbour of Balmerino is small, but a considerable quantity of grain is annually exported from it. The kirk and little hamlet lie on the road along the high ground from the Ferry to Newburgh; and there is a Free church at Logie. To the west, and on a slip of ground intruding upon the waters of the Tay, stands the ancient village of Balmerino, adjacent to which are the ruins of the once famed abbey, a beautiful structure, begun by Alexander II. and his mother, Emergare, daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, in 1229. These ruins, which are richly clothed with ivy and surrounded with some fine tall trees, are much admired by strangers. Acreage 3,431. Population in 1871, 717.

GAULDREY, a small village in the above parish, is about 8 miles inland from Newport. Here is a Board school. The aspect of the country is of an undulating character, and agricultural.

POST OFFICE, NEWPORT, Euphemia M. McNaughton, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Dundee) at half-past six and half-past eleven morning and half-past six evening, and are despatched at a quarter-past nine morning, a quarter-past four afternoon, and a quarter-past eight night.

Money Order and Telegraph Office.

.*. Letters for NEWPORT should be addressed "near DUNDEE," and for FORGAN, BALMERINO, and GAULDREY, "near NEWPORT, FIFE."

PITTENWEEM AND ST. MONANCE,

WITH THE PARISH OF CARNBEE.

PITTENWEEM is a royal burgh and seaport, in the parish of its name, 24 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 21 from Kirkcaldy, 5 s.s.w. from Crail, 10 s.s.e. from St. Andrews, and 3½ miles from Kilconquhar; situated on the course of the Frith or Forth, one mile from Wester Anstruther, and occupying rather an elevated site of ground above the harbour. It is bounded on the east by Wester Anstruther, on the south by the Frith or Forth, on the north by Carnbee, and on the west by St. Monance. Its length is one mile and a half and breadth half a mile. It consists of an irregular main street, with a few by-thoroughfares, the houses generally bearing an ancient aspect. The dwellings around the harbour are of a respectable appearance; and over this part of the town stand the remains of the priory of Pittenweem, the date of which is not with certainty known. Exclusive of some fragments of the religious edifice, there is a quadrangular range of curious antique buildings entire, said to have been the residence of the prior and other superior officers of the establishment. These remains exhibit a fine specimen of the domestic ecclesiastical architecture of the ages anterior to the Reformation. Adjacent to the monastic ruins stands the parish church, an old edifice with a turreted spire. Pittenweem was constituted a royal burgh by James V. in 1537; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and eight councillors; and joins with Cupar, St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, and Kilmory, in sending one member to Parliament. Between the period of Pittenweem being erected into a royal burgh and 1689, it appears that it was a place of considerable note and trade; but, from the latter period to the year of 1645, it suffered severely—no fewer than thirteen sail of large vessels belonging to this port having been either taken by the enemy or wrecked. It is now a fishing station of some importance, and fish curing is carried on rather extensively. In addition to which the trade in grain is of some consequence. The places of worship are the parish church, an Episcopalian and United Presbyterian chapels; it contains also a parish and burgh school and infant school. It was at Pittenweem that the robbery was committed upon the collector of the excise by Wilson and Robertson, which led to the outrages of the Porteous mob and the consequent catastrophe: the house in which this transaction took place is still standing on the north side of the street, north of the church. The area of the parish is 663 statute acres, and its population in 1871 was 1,893, and in 1881, 2,087.

ST. MONANCE (or St. Monan's) is a parish one mile and a half from Pittenweem, on the same coast as the latter place, containing the village or small town of its own name, and t. at of ABERCROMBIE. The parish measures a mile long, and about a mile and a half broad. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Frith of Forth, on the east by Pittenweem, and on the west by Elie and Kilsconquhar. There is a small harbour attached to it, and at one period it was ranked amongst the most considerable fishing stations on the coast of Fife, and its inhabitants still pursue that avocation. St. Monance is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, a treasurer, a provost, and twelve councillors. Lying away from the direct thoroughfare along the shore of the Forth, it is, comparatively seldom visited, and is therefore, only locally known. From the adjacent country its little church alone is visible, standing on the height above the houses, and so near to the sea as to be occasionally wet with its foam; it is a curious old Gothic edifice. Until the year 1646, the name of the parish was Abercrombie, or Inverny; its present name is derived from Saint Monan, a martyr celebrated for his miracles in Fife and the adjacent Isle of May. Acreage, 1,203. Population in 1871, 1,761, and in 1881, 2,054.

CARNEE is a parish situate three miles from Pittenweem its post town, entirely inland, containing the villages of ARNCRACH and OVENSTONE. Its length and breadth are each about four miles. It is bounded on the north by Cameron, on the south by Pittenweem, on the east by Crail and Kilrenny, and on the west by Kilsconquhar. A ridge of hills runs through the centre of it, the highest of which is Kellie Law, having an altitude of 800 feet above the level of the sea. Kellie Castle, formerly the seat of the Earls of Kellie, stands in this parish, on the south side of Kellie Law, and occupies a prominent and beautiful situation. The minerals are limestone and freestone. The greater part of the land is rich and fertile, and well cultivated, the rest being adapted for pasture. There is a parish church and school at Carnbee, and a Free church and school at Arncrach. Acreage, 8,396; population in 1871, 1,088, and in 1881, 1,056.

ST. ANDREWS,

WITH DENINO, CAMERON, ST. LEONARDS, AND LEUCHARS.

ST. ANDREWS is a city, a royal burgh, and seaport, and perhaps the most interesting town, as regards its ecclesiastical history, in North Britain; 39 miles N.E. of Edinburgh, 10 miles from Cupar, Anstruther, and Crail, and six from Leuchars, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, and stands within the bay to which it gives its name, wherein flow the Eden, and a small stream called the Kinley. Its history is mingled with the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Scotland, especially the latter; but the narrow space within which the proprietor of this work is confined in the descriptive notice of towns denies to him the gratifying task of performing that ample justice to these subjects which their importance demands, and which has been so ably and so elaborately treated by the authors of the "Gazetteer of Scotland."

The city of St. Andrews in 1410 first saw the establishment of its university, which was the earliest of the kind in Scotland, having originated with Bishop Wardlaw, a magnificent and liberal minded prelate; in 1411 it was endowed by charter. The college of St. Salvator was erected by Bishop Kennedy in 1455, that of St. Leonard in 1512, and that of St. Mary, or the divinity college, in 1537; in 1747 the institutions of St. Salvator and Leonard were united by parliamentary statute. The university library contains upwards of one hundred thousand volumes. The united college has a chancellor, a rector, and principal, with professors of Greek, logic, natural philosophy, moral philosophy, humanity, civil history, mathematics, and natural history. The college of St. Mary is an institution of less consequence, and consists of a principal, and professors of divinity, church history and oriental languages. The site of the Madras college is on the south side of the South street, immediately behind and comprehending within it part of that fine old ruin of the Black Friars, which will thus be associated with an improved system of education for centuries to come—uniting tastefully and appropriately something of the splendour of departed with much of the elegance and usefulness of present times. This noble institution, which was endowed by the late Dr. Bell, the distinguished founder of several similar establishments, both in this and in other towns in Scotland, cannot fail to secure to his memory, for ages to come, that veneration and esteem to which, as a benefactor of his race, he is so well entitled. The foundation stone was laid on the 9th April, 1832.

The town originally consisted of four streets: Swallow street (which has for centuries disappeared), towards the sea; North street, in which a number of elegant edifices are now situated, together with the buildings of the united college, partly old and partly new; Market street, which runs through the middle of the town; South street, which is spacious and well paved, terminates towards the east in a beautiful view of the ruins of the cathedral, and towards the west is a fine arched entrance, being the old city gate. The streets all concentrate towards the old cathedral, and the still more ancient tower of Regulus, or, as it is more commonly called, "St. Rule." In this quarter still stands a great part of the magnificent wall reared by Prior John Hepburn, in 1516; it runs along the south side of the town, and contains fourteen round and square towers, each having a niche on the outside for a saint, and appears one of the most interesting relics in the place. From the top of St. Regulus' tower there is a beautiful view of the Bell rock, the bay, the city, and the surrounding country. The ruins, rapidly decreasing, of the once formidable castle, the scene of Cardinal Beaton's cruelty to others, and of his own assassination, lie toward the north-east, and jut out into the sea. On the shore is a small eminence called the Witch Hill, the place where those convicted of witchcraft suffered. Near this spot is a monument raised in 1842 to the memory of the martyrs—Wishart, Mill, and others; it is in the form of an obelisk, and is forty-five feet in height.

As before stated, St. Andrews is a royal burgh, by virtue of a charter conferred by David I., which was confirmed by Malcolm II., the unfortunate monarch who was slain in Glamis castle in 1054; the charter, together with the silver keys of the city, and the axe which was used for the decapitation of Sir Robert Spottiswoode and some other royalists are still to be seen in the town house. The city is governed by a provost, a dean of guild and four bailies, twenty-nine councillors, and a treasurer. The burgh unites with Cupar, the Anstruthers, Kircunty, Pittenweem, and Crail in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament. St. Andrews enjoyed at one period an extensive foreign trade, and so lately as the reign of Charles I. it owned from thirty to forty trading vessels. The harbour is not large, but it is safe when reached; its most dangerous wind is from the north-east. The export traffic is chiefly in potatoes and grain, and the import in coals, pavement, timber, &c. A branch line of railway from the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, at a point near Milton, in the parish of Leuchars, was opened some years ago, under the title of the St. Andrews Railway Company, but is now the Leuchars and St. Andrews branch of the North British Railway. The length of the branch is five miles. Four banking establishments are in operation here, namely—branches respectively of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and of the Bank of Scotland, Limited. There are four principal inns—these are the Royal and Buccleuch Hotels, in South street; the Star and the Cross Keys in Market street.

Nearly opposite St. Mary's college, on the north side of the street, stands the town church, originally built by Bishop Turgot, in 1117, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It was in this church that John Knox preached his famous sermon which led to the destruction of the cathedral and monastic buildings. It is a large but inconspicuous edifice about 150 feet long by 60 feet wide. The present building was erected in 1800 upon the foundations of the old one, and the interior has of late been very much improved. Within the door, and on the right side is the superb monument of Archbishop Sharpe, erected by his son in 1769; it is composed of white marble; the figure of the prelate is represented in the attitude of kneeling, and below is exhibited, in relief, the assassination of this ecclesiastical dignitary. It was thoroughly repaired in 1850, at an expense of upwards of £100. Besides the two parish churches, an additional one has been erected. There are also a Free church, and Episcopal, United Presbyterian, Baptist, and Independent chapels. Golf, one of the national games of Scotland, has its stronghold in St. Andrews, the Royal and Ancient Golf Club having been established in 1751, the Queen is patroness, and it numbers upwards of 800 noblemen and gentlemen as its present members; they hold two great meetings annually. St. Andrews, whether as regards its early importance in the history of Scotland, with which it is so intimately associated—its numerous relics of antiquity, which everywhere arrest the eye; its venerable religious edifices, and its seminaries of learning—must be admitted to be a place possessing undying excellence to the mind of the antiquary, and replete with interest to the well-informed historian, the contemplative tourist, and the casual visitor. DENHEAD, a small village, is partly in this parish and that of Cameron. BOARHILLS, KINCAPLE, and STRATHKINNESS are also small villages distant about four miles from, and in the parish of St. Andrews. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs (for cattle and hiring) on the second Tuesday in August (old style), and the first Monday after the 10th of November. The entire parish of St. Andrews embraces 11,432 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 7,851, and in 1881, 7,829, of which number the town contained 5,771.

ST. LEONARDS is a small parish so intersected by that of St. Andrews that it is identical in all its interests. It consists of detached portions in and around the city, and is surrounded by the parishes of Kingsbarns, Crail, and Denino, and is connected both historically and politically with the city and parish of St. Andrews. Its area is about 1,005 acres, and its population in 1871 was 741, and in 1881, 739.

CAMERON parish is situate about three miles south of St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Carnbee and Kileconquhar, on the east by Denino, and on the west by Ceres

Its length is about six miles, and its breadth four miles, comprising an acreage of 9,835. The greater portion of the land is well cultivated, the remainder being pasture, well drained by numerous small streams. Coal and iron abound in this parish. There is a parish church and school at CAMERON, and an United Presbyterian church at LATHONES, and a private school at RADERNIE, which are small places in the parish. DENHEAD is a small village, a portion of which is in this parish. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,152, and in 1881, 1,008.

DENINO, or as it is sometimes spelt Dunino, parish is situated four miles south of St. Andrews, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail and Carnbee, on the east by Kinghorn, and on the west by Cameron. It is three miles long and about the same in breadth. The land is highly cultivated, and is intersected by woodlands and streams. Sandstone and ironstone abound in this parish. The parish church is a stone building in the Gothic style of architecture, erected in 1823. Acreage, 2,737. Population in 1871, 825, and in 1881, 297.

LEUCHARS parish is nine miles in length by five in breadth, and contains an area of 13,354 acres. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, and the parishes of St. Andrews and Kemback on the south, by Dairsie and Logie on the west, and by Forgan and Ferry-Port on Craig on the north. The small rivulets or burns of Moray and Moonzie fall into the Aden near the small village of Seggie; the former of these streams divides the parish into two portions. The surface is level and the soil tolerably fertile. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situated about a mile from the coast and six from St. Andrews, on the road from that town to Dundee. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in the weaving of linen. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway passes through the parish, and there is a station in the village. The church is very ancient, and considered one of the most perfect specimens of Saxon architecture in Scotland; it is supposed to have been erected in the twelfth century. There is also a Free church in the parish. GUARD BRIDGE is partly in this parish and partly in that of St. Andrews. SEGGER and BALMULLO are small villages also in this parish, which in 1871 possessed a population numbering 1,727, and in 1881, 2,185.

STRATHMIGLO

Is a parish and small town—the latter nearly two miles from Auchtermuchty, eight from Kinross, and is a station on the Fife and Kinross Branch of the North British Railway, which runs close by the town, distant about seven miles from Ladybank junction on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch, and about seven miles by road, situated in a pleasant plain, and on the north bank of the Miglo or Eden; it consists chiefly of two streets, with several lanes diverging from them. The town house stands about the centre of the principal street; it has a square steeple, at the top of which is a balcony surrounded by balustrades, the whole being surmounted by a spire nearly eighty feet high; from the front of the steeple projects a stone pillar which formerly served as a sun dial, now much defaced; above this are the arms of the house of Bute. By charter in 1600, the detached portions of Fens were erected into a burgh of barony, and this grant was confirmed by James VI., in 1605, but the nomination of bailies and admittance of burgesses was vested in the person of the superior. Within the last eighty years a village has been built on the opposite sides of the Miglo, called the FENS or CASH, and latterly two new streets have been formed, called Russell and Skene streets. Between the old town and this new village is a beautiful square and level meadow, called Town-green, intersected by the Miglo, and belonging to the burgh. The manufacture of linen is carried on to a considerable extent, and there is an extensive bleach works. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, two Free churches, and an United Presbyterian church. The first mentioned is a plain building, standing at the entrance of the town. A fair is held at Strathmiglo on the last Friday in June. The parish of Strathmiglo, which embraces an area of 9,024 acres, had in 1871 a population of 2,237.

GATESIDE is a village in the parish of Strathmiglo, distant two miles west therefrom; here are the works of the Gateshead Mill Company, who carry on an extensive business of shuttle makers and bobbin turners.

POST OFFICE, STRATHMIGLO, James Somers, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Ladybank) at a quarter before nine morning, five minutes past twelve noon, and half-past six evening, and are despatched thereto at a quarter before seven morning and a quarter past four afternoon.

Sub-Post Office, GATESIDE, George Fernie, Post Master.—Letters are delivered from Strathmiglo, and are despatched thereto at half-past two afternoon and at eight evening.

TAYPORT,

WITH THE PARISH OF FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG.

TAYPORT is a large village in the parish of Ferry-Port-on-Craig situated at the base of the hill opposite to Broughty Ferry, from which place it is distant about two miles across the river, 11 N. from Cupar, and five from Dundee. Previous to the construction of the railway, this village was identical in name with the parish, since which time it has taken the more appropriate name which it now bears. The Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Section of the North British Railway terminates here, and passengers are forwarded by steamboat to Broughty Ferry, and thence by rail to Dundee, both on the north banks of the Tay. A branch line was made to connect Tayport with the Tay bridge at the time that was opened, and has a station at Newport. For facilitating the shipping of goods the railway company have constructed a dock and thrown out a pier, which can be approached by the steamers at all times of the tide. Many new houses and villas have been of late years erected on the slopes of the Tay, commanding a fine prospect of the opposite shore, Broughty Ferry and Dundee. The greater part of the inhabitants are employed in the mills and factories for the spinning of yarns and the manufacture of linen and jute goods, from which the trade of the place derives material benefit. The North of Scotland Bank, Limited, has a branch here. The salmon fishery, which is co-extensive with the parish along the coast, is another source of emolument, being actively pursued during the season; the fish captured here are mostly sent to the London market; mussel dredging is also carried on extensively in the season, and is a source of great benefit to the fishing population of the immediate neighbourhood. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. There is also a Board school erected to accommodate about 600 scholars.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG is a parish five miles in length and from half a mile to a mile in breadth, stretching along the south margin of the Tay to its mouth where it empties itself into the German

Ocean; the land rises to a hilly range extending westwards. It is bounded on the south by the parishes of Forgan and Leuchars, and on the north by the Tay. The local situation of the parish naturally accounts for its name situated as it is on a rock or Craig, and was formerly a Ferry for the conveyance of passengers, horses and cattle, so that this was literally a Ferry, whose port was on a Craig (or Crag)—hence the name; but now the steamers in connection with the railway have long since abolished this mode of conveyance. The estate of Scotsraig, which comprises the whole parish, was formerly the property of Archbishop Sharp, of St. Andrews; the present Mansion House was built in 1807, and is a neat and substantial building, situated amidst some fine plantations and well laid out grounds. Agriculture is the chief employment, except what more exclusively belongs to Tayport. The parish church, which is conveniently situated in the village of Tayport, where most of the inhabitants reside, is an old edifice, rebuilt in 1825, and at present is in a good state of preservation; and in the immediate vicinity is the Board school. This parish, which embraces an area of 2,754 acres, in 1871 had a population of 2,674; the town at the same period contained 2,498.

POST OFFICE, Castle Street, Catherine Christie, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from Dundee, the North, and all parts at a quarter-past seven morning and a quarter-past five evening, and are despatched at half-past eight morning, a quarter-past three afternoon, and half-past six evening; Letters from Edinburgh, the South, and all parts, arrive at forty minutes past nine morning, and are despatched at ten minutes past six morning and four afternoon.

TORRYBURN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARNOCK AND SALINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF OAKLEY, CAIRNEYHILL AND TORRY.

TORRYBURN is a parish and village, the latter 17 miles s.w. from Kirkcaldy, 6 1/2 from Kincardine, 4 1/2 w. from Dunfermline, its post town, and 2 1/2 from Culross; seated on Crombie point, a promontory on the Frith, and two miles and a half from the Oakley station on the North British Railway. The surface of this parish is beautifully diversified, and the high grounds command fine views of the Frith of Forth and the Lothians. The situation of the village is pleasant and salubrious. The inhabitants at one time were chiefly employed in weaving, but this branch of industry has become extinct, and very little trade is now carried on. Some of the females are engaged in embroidering sewed muslins. From the rocky state of the shore it has been found impossible to form a harbour here; but a pier is situated at Crombie point, where steamers can land goods and passengers. The extensive collieries of the Lochgelly Coal Co.—which find employment for most of the inhabitants—are situated here. The parish lies in the south-west corner of the county, and extends along the shore of the Frith of Forth, between the parish of Dunfermline on the east and that of Culross on the west, and measures from four to five miles in length by about two in breadth. The parish, which is formed by the union of the baronies of Torry and Crombie, derives its name from the Gaelic word Torry, signifying the "King's Height," and burn, the Scottish term for rivulet. Within the boundary of the parish and adjacent to Torryburn village is that of Lower Torry. It is a very pretty village, having Torry bay in front, with comparatively high back grounds protecting it from the northern blasts of winter. The principal estates in this parish are Craigflower, Torry, and Lizeivar. Dunmarle estate is also adjacent. It possesses beautiful grounds and a museum, both of which are open to the public. The places of worship are the Established and Free churches, and a Board school. A fair is held at Torryburn on the second Wednesday in July. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,051.

CARNOCK parish lies to the west of Dunfermline, its post town, from which it is six miles distant, and north of Torryburn, which parishes separate it from the Frith of Forth. Like other parts of the country in this quarter, the ground is swelling and hilly, but very fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. There is very pleasant scenery in several parts. Coal is abundant. The village of Carnock is four miles from Dunfermline. No business of any consequence is carried on. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,764.

OAKLEY and CAIRNEYHILL are two villages in the parish of Carnock—the first-named, which is about a mile from Carnock village, and five miles from Dunfermline, its post town, sprung into existence since the year 1845, owing to the establishment of the Forth Iron Works. These works have been discontinued. At Oakley there is a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British Railway. CAIRNEYHILL village is situated on the road between Alloa and Dunfermline, three miles west of the latter town; the majority of the inhabitants are employed by the manufacturers of that place. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church at Carnock, and an United Presbyterian chapel at Cairneyhill. There is also a Board school. Population in 1871—Oakley, 1,127; Cairneyhill, 435.

SALINE is a parish and village, the latter two miles north from Oakley, and six north-west from Dunfermline, its post town; the parish, which extends to the borders of Perth and Clackmannanshire, is about five miles in length and four in breadth. The principal pursuit of the inhabitants is agriculture. The places of worship are an Established church and a Free church, both situated in the village, and there is also a Board school. Population in 1871, 596.

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EAST AND WEST WEMYSS, BUCKHAVEN, AND METHILL

WEMYSS is a parish on the south-east side of the county, and derives its name from the Celtic word Wamb signifying caves. The parish is bounded on the north by Kennoway and Markinch, on the south by the Frith of Forth, on the east by Scoonie, and on the west by Dysart. Its length is six miles east to west, and one mile and a half in breadth. Within the parish is the ancient castle of Macduff, now a ruin. This massive structure crowns a height above the shore, to the east of East Wemyss, commanding a most extensive view seaward. Near Macduff's Castle are several extensive excavations at the base of the bank, which have evidently been formed by the action of the sea at a very remote period; one of these caves is called the "King's Cave." From the tradition that James V., in one of his frolics, joined an encampment of gipsies here. A few years ago Sir James Simpson discovered sculpturings on some of the walls of these caves of various animals and peculiar symbols, common on large stones in the north and east of Scotland, understood by archaeologists to be of great antiquity. In a paper read before the Royal Society of Edinburgh he described these figures as met with in no other caves but those of Wemyss. The formation of the caves themselves is a most singular result of the extraordinary force of the sea rolling in upon this part of the Fife coast from the German Ocean. The sea has washed with great force the high rocks at this point, but their soft material, consisting of the new red sand stone, admitted of that scooping out by the force of the tides which had formed the caves. One of them, immediately under Macduff's Castle, is so narrow at the mouth that it is difficult to enter it, but it expands so as easily to contain a hundred persons. Another near is about fifty feet in height, and formed like a fine cupola. A third, still larger, between East and West Wemyss, termed the Glass cave, was used at the end of last century for the manufacture of glass from kelp formed from the sea weed. The land generally is in an excellent state of cultivation. The minerals are ochre, ironstone, and coal—the latter being very considerable and extensively wrought. A large portion of the Wemyss estate consists of coal seams of various depths, which have been increasingly wrought of late years; and a very large quantity of coal is yet unexcavated. In West Wemyss the coal trade has considerably increased, and new pits have been opened at Muiredge, near Buckhaven, and Methil Hill, where Methil harbour affords a good export. The railway trunk line skirts this parish to the west, and a branch runs along its northern border eastward to Leven. There is now a branch line from Thornton Junction running through the parish to Buckhaven. Population of the parish in 1871, 6,400, and in 1881, 7,807.

EAST WEMYSS is a village in the parish of Wemyss, one mile east from West Wemyss, five from Kirkcaldy, and three from Dysart, its post town; situated on the Firth of Forth, and consists principally of a single street. In this village the manufacture of linen fabrics is carried on extensively, both by hand and power, the factory of Messrs. G. and J. Johnston containing between two and three hundred power looms; a brewery and a malting house are the other branches of business. There are Free and Established churches in the village; also public and Free Church schools. Population in 1871, 777.

WEST WEMYSS is a village, one mile west from East Wemyss, four miles east from Kirkcaldy, five miles west from Leven, and two miles from Dysart; it is in the parish of Wemyss, and is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, ten councilors, and a treasurer. The harbour is situated at its western extremity, and has several vessels belonging to it employed in the exportation of coal, which is wrought close to the harbour. A short distance east of the village, on the brink or face of an eminence, and surrounded on the land side by beautiful plantations and pleasure grounds, is Wemyss Castle, the seat of Randolph Gordon Erskine Wemyss, Esq., who is the sole proprietor of the parish, and the representative of the oldest family in the county; the lands now forming the parish of Wemyss are said to have been part of the estate of Macduff, Shakespeare's well-known "Trane of Fife." The Established church is the only place of worship. There is also a school here. Population in 1871, 1,231.

BUCKHAVEN is a village, one mile east from and in the parish of Wemyss. There is a harbour here for the accommodation of boats engaged in the fishing station, which is considerable on this coast. The extensive flax-spinning mill and twine manufactory belonging to the Messrs. John Ireland and Sons, also the net manufactory of Messrs. J. & W. Stuart, are situated here, giving employment to a number of the inhabitants. Coal is also extensively worked in the neighbourhood; both villages are noted for their brisk pursuit of the fishing trade and fish curing. There is a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians, and several public schools in the village, and an Established church at Methil, which is a village in the parish of Wemyss. A fair is held at Wemyss on the second Wednesday in September. Population in 1871, 2,187; and in 1881, 2,952.

FORFARSHIRE,

OR ANGUS.—This county is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the west by Perthshire, on the north by the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, the latter lying also on its north-eastern verge; on the south, the Frith of Tay is its boundary, as likewise is Perthshire for a short distance; its extent from north to south is about thirty-eight miles, and from east to west thirty-six. The figure of this county is, perhaps, the most uniform of any in Scotland; and but for an indentation on its western side, caused by the intrusion of a part of Perthshire, it would describe almost a perfect square. The contents of its area have been variously estimated; it is stated to contain 890 square miles or 569,840 statute acres; of these there are about three hundred thousand cultivated, and two hundred and sixty thousand uncultivated; the portion occupied by lakes is inconsiderable.

EARLY HISTORY.—The district of ANGUS (now Forfarshire), with the contiguous county of Kincardine on the north, anciently formed the country of the Horesti, and a portion of the Pictish kingdom. On the dissolution of that government by Kenneth II., about the end of the ninth century, he is said to have divided it between his two brothers, Angus and Mearns, from whom the two counties derived their appellation. The district gave the title of Earl to two different families; on the extinction of the first, the earldom was conferred on a relation of King David Bruce, and in 1477 it merged in the family of the Douglasses; it has since devolved on the Duke of Hamilton. There are a number of old ruinous castles in this county, most of which have fallen to decay, in consequence of the baronies on which they stand having passed into the hands of the proprietors of other estates.

SOIL, SURFACE AND PRODUCE.—The great level valley of Strathmore runs through the centre of the county from east to west, and the lines of hills which flank this extensive and fine tract of country, with the Grampians on the north, and some minor ranges on the south, may be said to form this district into a series of continuous ridges, generally pursuing a direction from west to east, interrupted occasionally by the different rivers and streams coursing to the sea. The eminences of greatest altitude in the shire are—Hill of Dundee, 525; Dunnichen Hill, 720; Belmont, 759; Sidlaw, 1,406; Craigowl, 1,609; Oathlaw, one of the Grampians, 2,264; and Mount-Battock, 3,465 feet above the level of the sea. The portion of the Grampian mountains in this shire is diversified by many beautiful valleys, and from the summit of these elevations to the ocean on the east, and the Tay on the south, the surface of the land may be considered an inclined plain. From the aerial region of the highest Grampian an extensive and well varied prospect is presented, not only of almost the whole country adjoining the Tay, and of the ocean, but of the eastern part of the peninsula of Fife, the coast of East Lothian, and the heights of Lammermoor. The capabilities of Forfarshire for agriculture continued for centuries in that dormant state which characterised most parts of Scotland, but it cannot escape observation, at the present day, that this district is completely emancipated from the reproach of inattention to husbandry; it now exhibits a lively spirit and practically enlightened system of farming, and consequently a just appreciation of the advantages of this most useful of all sciences. Within the last seventy-five years, the farmers of this county have kept at least equal pace, in the improvements adopted, with those of similarly situated divisions of the country; and the wealth of Forfarshire has been steadily increasing both from its agriculture and its manufacturing products. The general drainage of the land has been proceeded in to a great and beneficial extent; and several lochs, particularly that of Rescobie, have been drawn off for the purpose of obtaining shell-marl, which has long been in high repute with the agriculturists, in their respective neighbourhoods; the introduction of bone manure has been followed by the most profitable results. The sowing of permanent pasture grasses and turnips is persevered in to a broad and lucrative amount; and the quantity of ground appropriated to tillage is annually augmenting. The improvement of live stock has been in proportional advance with that of cultivation, and has been materially facilitated by the zealous co-operation of the various agricultural societies. In traversing the lower parts of the shire, beautiful enclosures and plantations meet the eye in every parish; and by the formation of excellent roads in all directions a pleasing inducement is now held for travelling through this progressively prospering country. The planting of waste lands in this county seems to have made very little progress till about the middle of the last century, and when, at length, this sure source of future profit suggested itself, Scotch firs were the only sort of trees planted in such situations. More recent planters introduced the larch as a more valuable species of timber, and adapted, as they thought, to every variety of soil and situation, but experience has exploded this latter notion for it has been profitably proved that by the operation of draining, the moors and waste lands produce excellent oak and beech, of which a number of proprietors have planted extensively. From the mouth of the Tay to near the Westhaven the coast is sandy, having, from thence eastward, many sunken rocks. Within a mile to the east of Arbroath the shore becomes bold and rocky, presenting dreadful precipices to the sea, perforated with caverns by the incessant and insidious workings of the waves; the "Redhead," a promontory upwards of two hundred feet in perpendicular height, is the most striking feature of this rocky front; it forms the south point of Lunan Bay, and exposes a beautiful bench to the ocean for nearly three miles. The fisheries of Forfarshire are of great importance, those of the North and South Esk, and the coast of the county, are at the present time very valuable, and the mode of packing salmon in ice, for the London market, is a practice which has proved of peculiar advantage to those connected with that branch of the fishery.

MANUFACTURES AND MINERALS.—The manufactures of Forfar are of very high consequence; and as Fifeshire is celebrated for the production of the finer linen fabric, so is this county noted for the manufacture of the coarse hempen goods, wrought up from foreign materials; the spinning of yarn in large mills is carried on to a prodigious extent. Dundee, Arbroath and Montrose are its principal trading ports; the two first-named enjoy pre-eminence in the making of sailcloths, Osaburgs, sackings, dowlaves, and other linen textures; Brechin participates largely with other places in the preparation of flax; and the towns of Forfar, Montrose, and Kirriemuir are seats of material manufacturing importance. Exclusive of these particular stations, the inhabitants of all the little towns and villages are industriously employed in weaving the already prepared materials into cloth, and in the process of bleaching. This county is not distinguished for its mineral treasures. Of limestone, which is found in various parts, there are immense tracts in the Grampians; but from the expense of conveying coal to burn it this natural product, so valuable under other circumstances, is not wrought to any extent, except in the neighbourhood of Montrose, at Buddin (on the north side of Lunan Bay), and in the vicinity of Brechin. Freestone is plentiful in almost every parish; the colour is various, but in no instance so white and beautiful as the stone of Fife or Mid Lothian. The Arbroath paving stone is well known, and has a ready sale in London and Edinburgh. Lead has been found in several places, and was at one time wrought to a limited amount in the parish of Lochlee. But, unfortunately, for its local interests this county is destitute of coal—at least no vestige of this invaluable fossil has yet been discovered; the whole district is, therefore, dependent on the Fife and Newcastle collieries for this essential article of domestic comfort and manufacturing facility.

RIVERS, LOCHS, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the North and South Esk, which rise near each other on the northern confines of the county; the former originates in Loch Lee, which is filled by the water of the Lee, after being joined by the Ulich, which latter forms several beautiful cascades. The tributaries of the North Esk are the Luther, the Cruick, the West Water, the Tarf, and the Mark; enriched with these streams, it falls into the sea three miles from Montrose. The South Esk passes through the centre of the county, receiving in its progress the contributory waters of the Noran, the Lemno, the Carity, and the Prosen, and enters the ocean at Montrose. The third river in point of size is the Isla, which rises near the sources of the Esks; it receives, near Meigle, the Dean, the Carleat a little above Glammis, and the romantic burn of Glammis near the castle; and, turning westward into Perthshire, it joins the Tay at Kinclaven. There are also two lesser rivers, the Dighty and the Lunan. The former proceeds from some small lakes in the parish of Lundie, and falls into the mouth of the Tay, east from Broughty-Ferry; the latter conveys the waters of the lakes of Rescobie and Balgives to the sea, at Lunan bay. The Lunan is famous for its eels, and the other rivers abound with different varieties of the trout and salmon. In the enumeration of rivers yielding wealth to this county, the Tay must not be omitted—though this district cannot claim its origin—being far the most valuable from its adaptation to the purposes of commerce. It has its source in the western extremity of Perthshire, and, after winding through delightful scenery, the beauties of which are heightened by its sparkling waters, it becomes an estuary or frith, and about eight miles below Dundee it expands into the bay of St. Andrews, and loses its distinction in the wide reservoir of the German Ocean. The lakes of most consequence are Loch Lee, in the parish of its name; Loch Brandy, in the parish of Clova; the Loch of Forfar, near that town; the Lochs of Rescobie of Lundie and Lintrathen, in the respective parishes so denominated; and of Balgives, in the parish of Aberlemno. None of these are of great magnitude—indeed few, if any, are more than a mile in extent, and there is nothing peculiar in their qualities or situations. Forfarshire is included in an extensive line of railway communication, and it may be said that every town of note in the shire is visited by a main line or branch from it.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Forfarshire comprises fifty two complete parishes and four parts of parishes, in which are five royal and parliamentary burghs, namely, Dundee, Arbroath, Montrose, Brechin, and Forfar; the four last-named burghs, with Bervie (in Kincardineshire), unite in sending one member to the senate. The town of Dundee also returns two, and the county one; the gentleman sitting for the latter being James W. Barclay, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1831-2 was 3,642. The lord lieutenant is the Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorne. By the returns presented to Government in 1871, the county contained 106,324 males and 131,243 females; total, 237,567. In 1881 the numbers were: males, 120,035; females, 146,339; total, 266,374, showing an increase in the ten years of 28,807 persons. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the latter date was 51,242; uninhabited, 3,199; building, 109.

ARBROATH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ST. VIGEANS, ARBIRLOT, MARYWELL, AUCHMITHIE AND COLLISTON.

ARBROATH, formerly called Aberbrothock, is a royal burgh, a sea port, and the seat of a presbytery, 60 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 17 N.E. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Forfar, and 12 S. from Montrose, situated on a small plain, on the coast of the German Ocean, and surrounded on the north-west and east by eminences, in an amphitheatric form. About a mile north-east, but locally in the parish of St. Vigeans, the coast becomes very bold, rocky, and perpendicular. In the face of those cliffs are a number of caves and arches perforated by the action of the waves. They are a great attraction to visitors, having been rendered famous by Sir Walter Scott in his "Antiquary." This is a town of early origin, owing its rise to an important monastic institution, founded here by William the Lion, about the year 1178; the remains of this edifice are strikingly picturesque, and consist of ruinous towers of the most solid construction, columns overthrown and broken in pieces, Gothic windows, cloisters, staircases, &c., all exhibiting the ravages of time. The church of this abbey has been a most magnificent fabric; a part of the abbott's lodgings, which stands a little distance from the church still remains. The monks first came from Kelso, and Reginaldus (a monk of Tyron), was its first abbot. It was very extensively endowed with lands and other gifts by Kings William I., Alexander II., and Robert I., and their nobility. It possessed forty-six parish churches, and extensive lands in several counties, particularly in the north of Scotland, with privileges of regality, &c. The abbots of this foundation had privileges which others did not enjoy—they were exempt from assising at the yearly synods, and had the distinction of making use of and wearing the pontifical ornaments. King John conferred on the inhabitants of the place the same privileges that his subjects enjoyed throughout all England, except in his city of London. The town is situated on both banks of the river Brothock, and in the parishes of Arbroath and St. Vigeans. It contains several elegant streets, the principal business street being the High street, with churches, flax mills, and numerous factories. In 1812 a town house was erected, and in 1855, at the rear of it in an open space, a very handsome and commodious market house was built by the magistrates and town council, at an outlay of about £7,000; these, together with several other buildings, numerous new churches and places of worship, add much to the appearance of the town; the streets have also been greatly improved, and are daily improving, by superior paving and sewerage, and by the addition of elegantly fitted and well supplied shops. At the commencement of the eighteenth century Arbroath had but little trade, nor did it claim any notice as a place of manufacture. Nothing was then directly imported, except a small cargo of wood occasionally from Norway; flax, iron, and other useful commodities were purchased from the merchants in Dundee and Montrose. About the year 1738, the manufacture of coarse linens was introduced by the following accident:—a weaver in the town having a small quantity of flax, unfit for the kind of cloth then usually brought to market, made it into a web, and offered it to another of the inhabitants at a price by which he was willing to be a loser; the purchaser, who had previously been in Germany, remarked a similarity between this piece of cloth and the manufacture of Osnaburg, and prevailed upon the weaver to make trial of other webs of the same texture; the experiment succeeded—a company was established, and other parts of the county soon availed themselves of the discovery. The staple trade of Arbroath, at the present day, is the manufacture of sail cloth, and other coarse linens; the preparation and spinning of the yarns of these productions of the loom is carried on extensively, and chiefly by steam power, by many firms and individuals of the first respectability. Jute spinning has recently been introduced, but as yet it is of small extent compared with flax spinning. The staple manufacture has been much developed during the last fifteen years. In addition to the linen trade there are various concerns of magnitude, including iron foundries, a ship building yard (with a patent slip), extensive fanneries, roperies, &c., and a considerable trade exists in the exportation of grain and potatoes. The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1876, was 66, with a tonnage of 11,008. For the year ending 31st March, 1877, the customs revenue was £22,877 3s. 10d. Considerable improvements have been made on one harbour, the principal being the conversion of the inner harbour into a wet dock. For these works a loan of £20,000 was obtained from Government, but much more than that sum was expended. As a result of this improvement a large class of vessels, including steamers, are frequently in port. There is a neat signal tower for communication with the Bell (or Inch Cape) Rock, rising from the German Ocean, about twelve miles in a south eastern direction from Arbroath. Of this rock, and the tradition attached to it, a most entertaining account will be found in Chambers' "Gazetteer." On "the rock" is a lighthouse, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1808, and the beacon first gloomed over the deep on the 1st of February, 1811. At the lighthouse there are a principal lightkeeper and three assistants; each, in his turn, goes on the shore at the expiration of every six weeks, with liberty to remain a fortnight. In the town are buildings erected, where each keeper has apartments for the accommodation of his family; and connected with the establishment is a very neat signal tower situated near the harbour; this structure, about eighty feet in height, is furnished with an excellent telescope; and signals are arranged with the persons at the lighthouse on the rock, by the lightkeeper on shore, daily, at nine morning, weather permitting. There is an attendant vessel from Arbroath engaged to and fro in the summer time in charge of a master, but in winter it is by steamer from Granton. The monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by five banks: establishments—branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank, and the Bank of Scotland, Limited, all accommodated in handsome buildings; there is a bank for savings, well sustained by many provident depositors. There are numerous inns, and several newsrooms and libraries. A large public hall, with subsidiary rooms, &c., in the High street, was erected in 1866, by an incorporated company; and the parishes of Arbroath and Saint Vigeans have also erected a handsome combination poorhouse in an elevated and healthy suburb of the town. Arbroath is a very ancient burgh of regality, being founded at the same time with the abbey. It was then made a free burgh, and ultimately a burgh royal by crown charter in 1599. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and thirteen town councillors, and it has six incorporated trades, viz., hammermen, glovers, shoemakers, weavers, tailors, and bakers, besides two incorporations of seamen and brewers, and the Guildry Incorporation. It unites with Forfar, Montrose, Brechin, and Inverberrie in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament. The Right Hon. W. E. Baxter, of Kincaldrum, Forfarshire, is the present member. Burgh, police and justice of the peace courts are held steadily in the police court once a week, or more frequently if necessary, and a sheriff's court every alternate month for the recovery of debts not exceeding £12. There are more than twenty places of worship in the town and suburbs of Arbroath; their names, denominations, and respective sites, with the ministers officiating, are given at a subsequent page. An elegant steeple, one hundred and fifty feet in height, was a number of years since added to the parish church. There are several excellent public educational establishments in Arbroath, including the Arbroath High School, and several large and elegant public schools recently erected by the Burgh School Board. There are two newspapers published in Arbroath, viz., The Arbroath Guide, and The Saturday Evening Guide and People's Penny Paper, both of which are conducted upon Liberal principles. The local charities of the town include the infirmary and dispensary, a neat handsome stone building situated on the high common, and two destitute sick societies; also nine mortifications, viz., Carniche's, founded 1738, out of which the widows of seven shipmasters get a division half-yearly; Colvill's, founded 1812, out of which £60 annually is expended on the education of ten poor children; £10 to the Scotch Episcopal clergymen; £10 to the poor of Arbroath; the like sum to the poor of St. Vigeans, and the residue to twenty poor householders; Dove's, founded in 1841, for the education of "native born boys," of poor parentage; Mrs. Renny Strachan's, which amounts to £50 yearly, to be expended in purchasing coals and oat-meal for distribution at Christmas amongst the most necessitous poor. Forbes' Fund founded 1834, from which sums of not less than 28 nor more than £10 yearly, given for the relief of destitute widows and old unmarried females in the town of Arbroath; Gibson Fund, founded 1868, annual produce of residue of trust estate of the late William Gibson, applied as follows:—£100 to rector of High School for the education of eight boys, and the remainder divided yearly in sums not less than £20 and not more than £25 among poor householders of the town of Arbroath, preference being given to respectable worthy people of fallen fortunes; Gibson Christmas Charity, 1868, annual revenue of £2,000, applied on half in purchase of coals, other half in groceries, oatmeal, and clothes for distribution among the necessitous poor of the town; Gibson Mortification, 1868, annual revenue of a sum of £4,000, divided yearly among sixteen poor householders of the town; a fund, supposed to amount to about £2,000 bequeathed in 1875 by Mr. William Petrie, manufacturer, to be distributed in £10 shares among "poor deserving women of respectable character being in and belonging to, and at the time resident in, the parish of St. Vigeans, and who have not been in receipt of parochial relief for the preceding five years at least;" and Duncan Charity, 1869, annual profits of three-eighths of residue of the estate of the late David Dunn for behoof of poor, aged and reduced persons, not being objects of parochial relief. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the last Saturday in January, for general business and hiring servants; on the first Saturday after Whit-Sunday for hiring; July 18th (if it fall on a Saturday, if not, on the following Saturday) for general business and hiring; and the first Saturday after Martinmas for hiring. By the census returns for 1871 the parliamentary burgh of Arbroath contained a population of 19,973, and in 1881, 21,758.

ST. VIGEANS is a parish, extending eight and a half miles from east to west by four and a half in breadth, and contains the small villages of ST. VIGEANS, MARYWELL, AUCHMITHIE, and COLLISTON, or GOWAN BANK, also a part of the town of Arbroath. The first named contains the parish church, situated about one mile from Arbroath, the others varying in distance from two to three and a half miles from the same town. The parish is bounded on the north and east by Inverkeilor, on the west by Arbroath, Arbirlot, and Carmylie, and on the south by the German Ocean. Originally it included the parish of Arbroath, disjoined after the Reformation. It was itself formerly termed Aberbrothock, and now bears the name of a famous hermit who had his chapel and hermitage at the Grange of Conan, near to which was a baronial castle, named Gory or Gregory. From Whiting Ness, and as far as Auchmithie, the coast is very rugged and precipitous (gradually rising to Dickmountlaw Hill, 250 feet above sea level), containing a number of caves and arches, some of which may be passed through in boats and others on foot; they are a great attraction, and much visited. The stream of the Brothock flows through the parish and passes through the town of Arbroath, entering the sea at its harbour. The parish of St. Vigeans encloses an area of 12,781 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 12,305, and in 1881, 12,502.

ARBRIOT parish is contiguous to that of St. Vigens at Arbroath, on the north, and bounded on the south-east by the German Ocean, extending four miles in length by three in breadth. The village is about three miles west of Arbroath, situated on the east bank of the Elliot stream, from whence the name is derived, which was formerly Aber-elliot. Along the sea-coast the land is sandy; inland the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing various crops. About a quarter of a mile south-west of the village stands Kelly Castle, which originally belonged to the family of Auchterlony, and now to the Earl of Dalhousie. Arbriot contains an Established church and manse, a Free Church and manse, which were erected several years ago, at a cost of about £1,300, and a public school. Acreage, 6,747; population in 1871, 919, and in 1881, 822.

AUCHTERHOUSE,

WITH LUNDIE, FOWLIS EASTER, AND TEALING.

THE parish of AUCHTERHOUSE lies in the south-west corner of the county, about seven miles N.W. from Dundee, its post town, and on the south of the Sidlaw hills, bounded on the east by Tealing, on the south-east by Mains and Strathmartine, on the south by Liff, on the west and south-west by Lundie and Fowls, on the north-west by Newtyle, and on the north and north-east by Glamis, and is a station on the Dundee and Newtyle railway. There is a parish church (erected in 1776), also a Board school. The road from Dundee to Meigle (in Perthshire) passes through the parish, which comprises 5,708 acres, chiefly of arable land. Sandstone rock lies at or near the surface of almost the whole extent of the parish. The parish of Auchterhouse contained a population in 1871 of 721.

LUNDIE parish lies in the western part of the county, and at the head of the valley of the Dighty, bounded on the north by the Sidlaw hills, which divide it from Kettins and Newtyle, on the east by Auchterhouse, and on the south and west by Fowls Easter; Admiral Lord Viscount Duncan, whose name is familiar to every reader of British history, lies interred in the churchyard of this parish. The parish of FOWLIS EASTER, in Perthshire, was united to Lundie in 1618; its length is about 3 miles, and its breadth 1½ miles, commanding a beautiful view of the Carse of Gowrie, near the eastern extremity of which it lies, the Frith of Tay, and the opposite shores of Fife; in point of situation, and for natural beauty, and rich and varied scenery in every direction, few places can excel it. Conjointly the district forms a well-cultivated and productive tract of country, embellished with plantations and irrigated by several small lakes, of which Lundie Loch is one. The church of Fowls, which was founded by Sir Andrew Gray, for a provost and some prebendaries, is still perfectly entire, although it was built in the year 1143. The parish, which comprises 7,012 acres, abounds in grey freestone of good quality, and in 1871 had a population of 691.

TEALING parish, situated five miles north from Dundee, its post town, and lying on the south side of the Sidlaw chain, is about six miles in length, and three in breadth; it is watered by the small river Fithie, a tributary stream to the Dighty, which separates it from the united parish of Mains and Strathmartine on the south, and is bounded on the east and west by Murros and Auchterhouse, and a line drawn nearly along the summits of the hills above mentioned would divide the parish from Glamis on the north. In this parish are found grey slate, moorstone, and freestone. John Glass, founder of the sect appropriately designated "Glassites," was minister of Tealing anterior to his open separation from the Church of Scotland. The places of worship are the parish and a Free church, and there is also a Board school. Acreage of parish, 7,227; population in 1871, 879.

BRECHIN,

WITH THE PARISH OF FARNELL.

BRECHIN is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish; 70 miles north from Edinburgh, situated on the north bank of the Southesk, and on a branch line of the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, for which there is a station here. The town consists of one main street, with several smaller ones diverging; the principal is about a mile in length, extending from the north part to the picturesque bridge of two arches. Some of the streets, particularly about the Cross, are remarkably steep. Brechin more than once suffered by the incursions of invaders and broils of civil war; it was burnt by the Danes in 1012, and in 1645 was subjected to a similar calamity by the Marquis of Montrose; two years afterwards it was nearly depopulated by that dreadful scourge, the plague. Formerly the town was walled, but the gates have been long removed, and in the present day it exhibits the appearance of a well-built thriving place. It has been greatly improved during the last few years, and is now well supplied with gas and water. Flax spinning and the manufacture of linen, and a paper mill, employ numerous hands. There is a large distillery here. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, British Linen Company Bank, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established here. There are several excellent inns, the Hotel in Clerk st. and Panmure st. being a good family and commercial house. A newspaper, established in 1848, published on Tuesday morning, entitled the Brechin Advertiser, is conducted with much talent. The antiquity of Brechin as a royal burgh is of remote date; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, hospital master, and seven councillors, who are also police commissioners. The burgh joins with Forfar, Montrose, Arbroath, and Inverhervie in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative is the Right Hon. W. E. Baxter, Asholife, Dundee. A burgh or baillie court is held on every alternate Wednesday, and oftener when necessary; the bailies are the Judges. A justice of the peace court is held on the first Wednesday in every month; and a sheriff court on the third Tuesday of January, March, May, July, September, and November; the two last mentioned courts are for adjudicating small debt claims. In ancient times the Abbey of Culdees existed here; and in 1150, when Brechin was constituted an episcopal see by David I., it is supposed that the site of this establishment was that selected for the foundation of the cathedral. An interesting fragment remains of the hospital of Maison Dieu, founded by William Brechin in 1284. The cathedral of St. Ninian, which now forms the parish church, stands on the north verge of a precipitous ravine, which separates the burgh lands from those of Brechin Castle; it was originally a stately Gothic structure, but its architectural symmetry has been materially injured by the injudicious taste displayed in modern repairs. The length is 116 feet and the breadth 61 feet; the steeple is a square erection, 70 feet in height, surmounted by an hexagonal spire of 50 feet. The cathedral of Brechin was one of the few places of worship in which the service of the liturgy was for some time performed without interruption after its promulgation in 1637. The bishop was a man of singularly strong and daring character, and ascended the pulpit with a pair of pistols under his gown, determined to carry the behests of royalty into execution at whatever risk. The other places of worship are two handsome Free churches, three United Presbyterian, a chapel of ease, a Scotch Episcopal, and a meeting house in Bank street for Plymouth Brethren. Contiguous to the cathedral stands the round tower of Brechin, similar to those in Ireland. It is supposed to have been erected about the year 1010, and built of freestone, 85 feet in height to the cornice, and 35 feet more to the pinnacle of a modern spire. "It has several windows—four in particular, at the top, facing the cardinal points. The entrance to the tower is by a door near the ground, on the outside, which was built up, but has been re-opened, and the whole edifice repaired by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, when new wooden ladders were erected. Numerous figures in an antique style of carving, and a rude representation of the crucifixion, are the surrounding ornaments of the door. The diameter of the tower at the bottom is 16 feet. Formerly there were two small bells in it, which were removed to the large steeple, where they now hang. Between the town and the river, and only separated from the former by the ravine before mentioned, stands Brechin Castle, an ancient seat of the Maules of Panmure, now represented by the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie; it is built on a precipitous rock overhanging the stream. It sustained a siege of twenty days in 1303 from the English army under Edward I., but Sir Thomas Maule, its commander, being killed, it surrendered. The south front, towards the river, consists of some remains of the original structure, with some more recent erections, including a handsome square tower; the west front is formed with regularity, in the style of the seventeenth century, with round towers at the angles. Brechin has the advantage of numerous educational seminaries, and these have stimulated even the humble classes to the acquisition of knowledge, which is ministered to them by means of several excellent public libraries, the volumes of which are in active demand. One of the chief architectural ornaments of the town is the elegant building containing the principal schools, and the mechanics' institution. The front is in the Tudor style, with castellated parapet, ornamented with pinnacles; a fine tower rises in the centre to the height of eighty or ninety feet, from the summit of which there is an enchanting prospect. This elegant structure was erected at the sole cost of the late Lord Panmure, who also presented to the institution numerous valuable paintings, which grace the fine hall of the mechanics' institution. His lordship's munificence also granted £1,000 to be invested at interest, which yields about £40 a year, and is appropriated to enriching the library with books and the support of courses of lectures; and the subscribers are entitled to the benefit of the whole, for a very small payment annually. A very handsome building for the Young Men's Christian Association has been erected in Bank street, at a cost of £1,500, and was opened in 1878, the money being raised by public subscriptions. Also in the same year was erected the new Poor-house, on the hill in Infirmary street, at a cost of £3,000; the old poorhouse, in City road, has been converted into a model lodging house, and is the property of the town council. This town has given birth to several individuals of genius and literary distinction, among whom may be enumerated Maitland, the laborious historian of Edinburgh and London; Dr. Gillies, the historian of Greece; and his brother, Lord Adam Gillies. Trinity Muir, one mile north of the town, besides being the site of several great fairs, is resorted to by cricket and golf players during the summer. The market is held on Tuesday, and the fairs (held on Trinity Muir), the third Wednesday and Thursday in August, and the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in September. The great sheep, cattle, and horse fair (on Trinity Muir), which commences on the second Wednesday in June, and continues for three days, is one of the largest in Scotland. "Croft" markets, for cattle, are held in the town, and horse markets, also, towards the end of February and beginning of March. Brechin parish embraces an area of 14,813 acres; and in 1871 had a population of 9,514, the town containing 7,959; the latter in 1881 numbered 9,931.

FARNELL is a parish four miles from Brechin, its post town; it is about three miles in length, and two miles in breadth, bounded on the north by Brechin, on the south by Rossie Muir, on the east by Maryton, and on the west by Kinnell and Brechin, and $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west from Montrose. Kinnard Castle, the family seat of the Earl of Southesk, is an elegant and spacious modern building of a square form, with towers of various dimensions; it contains a good collection of paintings, and has an imposing and princely appearance, with its beautiful grounds and other ornamental appendages, it is considered one of the most beautiful seats in this part of the country, being situated in a deer park of about 1,000 acres in extent. Acreage, 6,709; population in 1871, 580; in 1881, 618.

BROUGHTY-FERRY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONIFIETH AND MURROES, AND THE HAMLETS OF BARNHILL AND NEWBIGGING.

BROUGHTY-FERRY is a considerable modern town, seated on the Frith of Tay, about four miles east from Dundee, nearly opposite to Ferry-Port-on-Craig, or Tayport, and on the Dundee and Arbroath Railway. The place takes its name from the old ruined castle of Broughty or Burgh Tay (the defence of the Tay, situated on its south-eastern extremity, on a rocky eminence jutting into the water. The castle until lately was in ruins, but is now restored, and made into a formidable defence for the mouth of the Tay. Broughty is divided into two districts, EAST FERRY and WEST FERRY—the former is in the parish of Monifieth, the latter in that of Dundee; it is regularly built, and has improved very considerably during the last few years, having become the place of residence of many of the principal bankers and merchants of Dundee, whose pleasant houses and cottages are thickly scattered on the hill side, and along Monifieth road many large and good shops have lately been built, and branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and a Savings Bank are established. The town is governed by commissioners of police, and police magistrates, under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. At one time the East Ferry comprised only a few fishermen's huts, built along the beach; the population is now considerable, while people from various parts of the country visit it during the summer months to enjoy its pleasant scenery, pure air, and for the sake of its excellent bathing accommodation. There are no public works here, the inhabitants being chiefly engaged in fishing, except a few tradesmen, and those who are independent of manual labour. A new pier and harbour was constructed in 1871, at a cost of about £3,800, projecting in the river about 200 feet due south, with a width of 30 feet. At the outer end of the pier is a wooden platform and slip, supported on piles secured and braced together by horizontal and diagonal timbers, forming an angle running eastward in the direction of the North British Railway pier, which gives it a semi-dock like appearance. There is berthage for four or five small vessels. The slip is of an uniform breadth of 20 feet, running from the top of the pier down to low water, partly underneath the platform at a gentle declination; this arrangement will accommodate vessels at low water, and the landing and embarking passengers from small steamers at any state of the tide. Storehouse, office, and steelyard have also been added. About half a mile to the north of Broughty-Ferry is Fort-hill, where were lately some remains of the fortifications erected by the English, in 1548, during the reign of Henry VIII., and regency of the Earl of Arran, when they ravaged Dundee and the surrounding country; in 1550 the works on this hill being surrendered to an allied army of Scots, Germans, and French, under M. Des Thermies, were dismantled, and at the present day they present merely shattered relics, the plough having occasionally been driven over a part of the ground which they once covered. There are nine places of worship—two Established, three Free, two United Presbyterian, one Episcopal, and one Independent. The East Free church, built in 1865 is a very handsome Gothic structure. There are also three Board schools, one of which, the Eastern, has been built since the new Education Act came into operation, and the other two have been enlarged and much improved. Besides these there is a secondary or collegiate school, and a few ladies' schools. There are also two Public Halls. Population of the town in 1871, 5,817; and in 1881 7,407.

MONIFIETH is a parish lying on the shore of the Frith of Tay, extending inland about four miles and a half from south to north, and the breadth from one and a half to three and a half miles, embracing 5,952 acres. It is bounded on the south by the Frith of Tay, and on the east by the parishes of Barry and Monikie, on the north by Monikie, and on the west by Murroes and Dundee. The name is understood to be derived from the Gaelic appellation of Monifith, or the "stag moss." The village of Monifieth is situated about two miles east from Broughty-Ferry, on a brae with a southern exposure and within a short distance of the sea; it contains some very fine villas, a machine works, and a large jute spinning mill. It has a parish and a Free church. The parish church, though plain in appearance, is a conspicuous edifice, surrounded by a burying ground, containing a variety of finely carved antique tombstones, executed with a taste rarely seen in the cemetery of a humble village. There are also two Board schools. Population of the parish (which includes the greater portion of Broughty-Ferry) in 1871, 7,252, and in 1881, 9,511.

BARNHILL, one mile east from Broughty-Ferry, in the same parish, is a station on the Dundee and Forfar direct line, opened for passenger traffic November 14th, 1870, which has facilitated the opening out of this locality in building sites, and it has now become a favourite place of residence. Here is a Convalescent Home in connection with the Dundee Royal Infirmary, erected in 1876 and opened in March, 1877, from funds left by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart.

NEWBIGGING is a small hamlet in the parish of Monikie, and about seven miles north-east of Dundee (its post town). It contains an United Presbyterian church, a very neat building, also a school of the same denomination. Population returned with the parish.

MURROES parish is in the southern part of the county, three miles in length by two in breadth, bounded by Dundee and Mains on the south, Monifieth on the east, Mains and Tealing on the west, and Inverarity and Monikie on the north, lying on the road from Brechin to Dundee, its post town, from which latter it is about five miles distant. The greater part of the parish is arable, and it is adorned with some plantations. There are quarries producing quantities of pavement and other kinds of stone. The parish church is the only place of worship. A new public school, with a house adjoining for the master, has been erected. Population in 1871, 751.

CARNOUSTIE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BARRY, MONIKIE, PANBRIDE, MURDRUM, NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, AND EAST AND WEST HAYENS.

CARNOUSTIE is a thriving village, post town and station on the Dundee and Arbroath Joint Railway, in the parish of Barry. It is a pleasant sea bathing place, situated on the coast of the German Ocean, about ten miles E. from Dundee, and 7 1/2 by W. from Arbroath, and is much resorted to in the summer months by visitors from Dundee, and other parts of Scotland, and since the introduction of a supply of pure water, and a thorough system of drainage, it is considered one of the best seaside resorts on the east coast. On the extensive links or downs in the neighbourhood of the village is a battery, where the naval reserve have weekly exercise with heavy guns. The village is well supplied with gas. There are several handsome villas in and near the village, and many respectable lodging houses; also the large linen manufactory of Messrs. Smieton & Sons, who employ upwards of 400 hands; an extensive vitriol works, belonging to Messrs. Tennant & Co. of Glasgow; a Savings Bank, and branches of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are a Church of the Establishment and others for the Free, United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and an Episcopal church. There are also public schools. Population in 1881, about 3,000.

BARRY, or BARRIE, is a parish, bounded on the north and west by Monikie and Monifieth, on the east by Panbride, on the south by the German Ocean and the Frith of Tay; extending about three miles from east to west, and four miles from north to south. The village is 9 miles

E. from Dundee, and not quite that distance south-west from Arbroath on the road from the latter town to Broughty Ferry, and contains the parish church, a Free church, and a public school. The southern half of the parish is generally sandy, and used principally for the grazing of sheep and cattle, the northern half contains many large farms, all of them in the highest state of cultivation. The Dundee and Arbroath Railway has a station near the village. At BUDNODNESS on the southern extremity of the parish are two lighthouses to guide vessels on their entrance into the Tay. The parish of Barry comprises an area of 5,328 statute acres and in 1871 had a population of 3,068, and in 1881, 3,228.

MONIKIE is a parish seven miles in length by five in breadth, having an area of 8,921 statute acres, bounded on the south by the parishes of Barry and Monifieth, nine miles north from Dundee, six miles north-west from Broughty Ferry and about five miles from Carnoustie (its post town). There is a station here on the Dundee and Forfar section of the Caledonian Railway. The land is well cultivated, much of the produce being required for the Dundee market. Whinstone, freestone, sandstone and pavement stone abound in the parish. It contains the parish church, Free church, and a church at the village of NEWBIGGING for the United Presbyterians. There are also public and other schools. About half a mile south of the parish church, on the Hill of Downie, stands a monument 105 feet in length, which was erected in 1839, during the lifetime of the late Lord Panmure, by his tenantry as a testimonial for the many favours they had received at his hands. The population of the parish was in 1871, 1,897, and in 1881, 1,412.

PANBRIDE is a parish which joins Barry and Monikie on the west, Carmylie on the north, Arbriol on the north-east, and a detached part of St. Vigeans on the south-east; it runs about four and a half miles inland from the German Ocean, and in width is about two miles, embracing an area of 5,199 statute acres. It contains the village of MUIRDRUM and NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, the last being now considered as forming part of Carnoustie, from which it is divided by the Lochy burn. A mile further to the east are the Panbride Bleach Works, belonging to Mr. J.

F. Dickson; in the northern part stands the house of Panmure, a seat of the Earl of Dalhousie; with its extensive enclosures and plantations. The parish is watered by a streamlet that runs through a valley called Batties Den, over which is thrown a high bridge on the turnpike road from Dundee to Arbroath. The inhabitants are principally engaged in fishing and agricultural pursuits. The coast is flat and rocky, but has two open harbours at the fishing villages of East and West Havens. At the former is a station on the Dundee and Arbroath Railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,895.

DUNDEE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF LIFF AND BENVIE, MAINS AND STRATHMARTINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF BIRK HILL DOWNFIELD, AND INVERGOWRIE.

DUNDEE is an important royal burgh and seaport, on the north bank of the Firth of Tay, about nine miles from its mouth. It is the second town in point of commercial importance, and the third in respect of population in Scotland. The parish is bounded on the south by the Tay; on the north by the united parishes of Mains and Strathmartine; on the east by Murroes and Monifieth; and on the west by the united parishes of Liff and Benvie, a large portion of which is incorporated with the burgh. The town is 43 miles N. from Edinburgh, 68 s.w. from Aberdeen, 29 s.w. from Montrose, 23 E. by N. from Perth, 17 s.w. from Arbroath, and 14 s. from Forfar. The Caledonian and North British Railways have each stations in the town. The Caledonian Railway system connects Dundee with Perth, Stirling and the west of Scotland generally, and London and the south by the West Coast lines. One branch runs northward to Newtyle, Blairgowrie, and Alyth, and another branch runs direct to Forfar, the county town. The Caledonian are joint owners with the North British Company of the Dundee and Arbroath Railway, which connects Dundee with Arbroath, Montrose, Aberdeen and the whole north-east of Scotland. The North British has running powers for a certain distance over the east and west lines, and has a joint right in part of both the terminal stations—one situated at the east and the other at the west end of Dock street. It has also constructed the Arbroath and Montrose direct line, which, when opened for passenger traffic, will greatly increase the facilities for communication between Dundee and the south-eastern portion of Forfarshire and the south-western portion of Kincardineshire. At present (1882), the North British have to cross the Tay by a ferry between Tayport and Broughty. In 1870 the North British Railway Co. obtained an Act of Parliament for bridging the Tay at Dundee. The bridge was designed by Mr. Thomas Bond, the Company's engineer, the plans being for a single line of rails only. Work was commenced in June, 1871, but in the course of construction various drawbacks were encountered, the greatest of these being the unexpected differences in the nature of the river bottom, which rendered a modification of the original plan necessary, cast-iron piers having to be substituted for brick piers in the larger portion of the structure. After considerable delay, the bridge was completed and opened for traffic on the 31st May, 1878. Mr. Bond was shortly afterwards knighted. The bridge was 10,512 feet in length, and consisted of 85 spans, some of these being over 90 feet above high water level, and the cost was said to be £350,000. Unfortunately, in designing the structure, the engineer did not make sufficient allowance for the force of the hurricanes which occasionally sweep down the valley of the Tay, and on the evening of the 25th December, 1879, during the prevalence of a gale of unusual force, while the mail train from Edinburgh was passing over it the whole of the "high girders," extending over thirteen spans, were blown into the river, together with the train, leaving a gap of 3,000 feet. Upwards of seventy persons perished with the train. During the short time the bridge was available for the train service, its great advantage as a link in the connection in the means of railway accommodation between the north-east of Scotland and the south was clearly demonstrated. It was also seen that the direct and easy communication opened up with the Fife coal fields would come to be of immense benefit, both to the railway company and the trade of Dundee. These considerations led the North British directors to take steps to restore the means of communication, and ultimately it was decided to build a new bridge, and the plans by Mr. Barton were approved by Parliament in May, 1881. The new bridge is to be for a double line of rails, and it is to be some ten feet lower at the extreme height than the wrecked bridge. It is understood that sufficient allowance has been made in the new design to meet the enormous lateral pressure of the severest gales. At present February, 1882, the works are not yet begun. The Tay Bridge Station and the expensively constructed tunnel below Dock street, connecting the Dundee and Arbroath joint lines, are still utilised, to the great advantage of passengers to Broughty Ferry and the east. It also enables the goods traffic to be more commodiously served than it was before the construction of these works. The situation of Dundee is very beautiful. The river here forms a bay two miles broad, from the margin of which the town spreads itself over a gradual acclivity, ascending towards the base of a lofty and sheltering eminence, called "Dundee Law." The picturesque coast of Fife shire forms the southern border of the Tay, and a steam ferry-boat effects an hourly communication between the opposite shores of the estuary.

Dundee is a place of considerable antiquity. From a 6-8th hamlet it came to be a walled town, with a castle of considerable strength. It was created a royal burgh by William I. in 1164, this privilege, according to tradition, having been obtained by David, Earl of Huntingdon, who, after escaping the perils of shipwreck, landed at the place on his return from the crusade. During the usurpation of Edward I., the town was made the station of an English garrison; and in the course of the struggle for the Scottish crown between that prince (nominally on behalf of Balliol) and Robert Bruce, Dundee was taken and retaken twice. The patriot Wallace, whose deeds have kindled the enthusiasm of bard and historian, received his education at the Grammar School of Dundee. When at school Wallace was mixed up in a quarrel with the English governor's son, and having killed him had to seek safety in flight. The castle of Dundee becoming so formidable an annoyance when in possession of an enemy, an occurrence but too frequent, Bruce deemed it expedient to demolish it, and not a vestige of it now remains. Its site was near the present Castle street, that street having been formed by blasting a portion of the rock on which it stood. The town was destroyed in the reign of Richard II. of England, and it suffered a similar infliction when Edward VI. sat upon the English throne; but on each occasion it speedily recovered, and resumed its rank among the principal Scottish towns, several times being pledged as security for ransoms, and for the fulfilment of treaties. It was also a place of royal residence, there being a palace to the south of the Nethergate and a mint at the foot of the Overgate, the site of which is still indicated by the name of "Mint Close," given to an entry in that quarter. The oldest charter that Dundee can boast of is one granted by Robert Bruce, recognising the burghal privileges conferred by William the Lion, brother to the Earl of Huntingdon, mentioned above. In this place the reformed religion found some of its earliest and warmest defenders. So zealous was the town in its cause as to be honoured with the appellation of "the second Geneva." In 1541 George Wishart, who suffered martyrdom at St. Andrews, preached here, and on one occasion narrowly escaped assassination at the hands of one of Cardinal Beaton's emissaries. The occasion was a sermon preached by Wishart, from the East Port during the plague—the plague stricken being outside the wall. In memory of the event, the East Port, the only portion of the old walls extant, is still kept standing, although it cannot be called either ornamental or useful. In April, 1545, the Duke of Montrose took Dundee by assault, the inhabitants suffering severely in the carnage which ensued. The last calamity of this kind that befel this town was its capture and plunder by General Monk. This event is the subject of many local traditions. Monk, according to one story was so enraged at the stubborn defence of the citizens that he gave orders to sack the place and was only moved to pity on witnessing an infant sucking the breast of its dead mother in the street where she had fallen a victim in the general massacre. In connection with this short historical sketch we may mention a few eminent names that have conferred honour on Dundee, from its being the place either of their birth, education, or labour:—Hector Boece the historian; Sir William Wallace; John Blair; Goldwin and Ferguson, the poets; Sir George Mackenzie, the scholar and lawyer; and in more recent days, Drs. Small, Willison, Davidson, and Russell; Nicoll the poet; and George Gilliland, the critic and preacher; and the naval victor, Admiral Duncan. The author of the "Song of the Shirt" also resided in the town for a short time and some of his first efforts at versifying appeared in the columns of the Dundee Advertiser.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.—Dundee is a place of great commercial activity, and is the principal seat of the linen and jute manufactures. The rapid increase, both of its productions and shipping, is the most striking feature of its recent history. When Monk captured the place in 1651, sixty vessels were found in the harbour, so richly laden as to afford a booty to the captors exceeding in value the whole of their spoil "in the wars throughout the three nations." The plunder, however, did not enrich the captors, for the ships sank in passing the bar. This heavy blow crushed the rising commerce of the town, and for several years few vessels floated in the deserted harbour. In 1659, however, thirty-seven vessels arrived in the port; in 1671, forty-nine; in 1680, eighty-five; but in 1781 the number had considerably decreased, and the trade continued to dwindle till this once flourishing port was resorted to chiefly by fishermen and smugglers. But from the situation of Dundee, the commodiousness of its harbour, and the enterprise of its inhabitants, such a state of matters could not last always. The tide of commerce turned, and once more set into the forsaken haven. In 1745 the port dues scarcely amounted to £1,200; but in 1792 the number of vessels belonging to the town had increased to 116, measuring 8,550 tons; and about the same period the foreign clearances outwards and inwards were nearly 12,000 tons, while the coasting trade was about 60,000. Since 1815, when the harbour was placed under new management, the increase has been enormous, and the total revenue from all sources from that date until May, 1881, amounted in the aggregate to £221,237 1s. 6d. During the year ending May, 1881 the revenue amounted to £20,165 9s. 5d.; in the year ending May, 1861, it was only £25,229 5s. The augmentation of its shipping gave an impulse to improvement; new sea walls and quays were built, the tide harbour was extended, wet docks and graving docks were constructed, and such undertakings were effected that there are only two or three ports in Great Britain which now afford greater facilities and accommodation for shipping. In 1815 the management of the harbour was placed in the hands of Commissioners, appointed annually under an Act of Parliament; but by a new Act, passed in June, 1840, the management was transferred to trustees to be elected annually; the provost, bailies, and dean of guild to be perpetual trustees, in virtue of their office. The harbour is well managed and the extensions rendered necessary by the increased business of the port are pushed rapidly forward. The total expenditure for constructing and maintaining the harbour from July, 1815, to May 31, 1881, inclusive of interest on debt and sinking fund, was £220,237 1s. 6d. The total cost of harbour and property up to date amounted to £311,957 1s. 8d. The debt due by the Dundee Harbour on the 31st May, 1881, amounted to £349,621 1s. 7d. The progressive increase of revenue will appear from the following statement:—

The falling off in the number of vessels and the increase in the tonnage is explained by the great number of large vessels engaged in the direct trade with Calcutta consequent on the growth of the jute trade. The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1881 was 193, of the aggregate register of about 100,192 tons. The whale fishery employs several ships from this port, all fitted with screw propellers. Steam navigation is successfully conducted by the Dundee, Perth, and London Shipping Company, whose vessels ply to London twice a week, and to Hull weekly. These steam ships have obtained a high character for swiftness and excellent accommodation. There is also regular steam communication with Newcastle and Liverpool, besides several large steamers engaged exclusively in the coal trade. Direct steam communication is carried on with New York at irregular intervals, but a regular line of steamers is talked of. The earliest articles manufactured in the town seem to have been soap and glass, which engaged a great number of hands; and the brewing of ale was carried on to some extent. The glass manufacture has died out, as has also the sugar refining, which was once carried on. In 1866, however, a new branch of manufacture—that of linseed crushing—was established by Messrs. Gellatly, Mitchell & Co., in a mill at Craigie, to the east of Dundee; and Messrs. Wilson & Sons also carry on this trade at the Caledonian Oil Mills. The manufacture of shoe uppers by the sewing machine was introduced by Messrs. Henderson (whose tanning and leather works are on a very extensive scale), a few years ago, and has been very successful. The wholesale shoe trade which at one time flourished in this town has been recently revived. There are two large manufactories employing a considerable number of hands, and there is every reason to believe that the trade has taken firm root in the place. The manufacture of marmalade has for many years employed a large number of hands, Dundee marmalade being famous throughout the world. Messrs. Keiller & Sons' establishment is probably the largest in the kingdom, and there are other firms extensively engaged in the trade. The business of building ships flourished at an early period, and such an occupation soon led to the manufacture of cordage, which still remains a branch of commerce, but not to such an extent as formerly. The manufacture of cotton was once tried, and had the appearance of forming an important branch in the trade of Dundee, having, at one time, seven companies engaged in it; but at length it declined, and finally died away, in favour of Glasgow. The manufacture of woollen cloths was next attempted, but met with no success. Out of these failures arose a spirit for manufacturing goods from flax; and, as an encouragement to this branch in its infancy, a bounty was given by Government on all linen exported, and a heavy duty laid on the importation of foreign linens. Whatever the effect of these enactments, the trade of Dundee continued to increase, and since the introduction of the jute manufacture the progress of the town has been very great. The following returns of the quantities of flax, &c., imported in various years since 1745 will show the progress of the flax trade:—

Jute was first brought under the notice of Dundee manufacturers by the late Thomas Neish, Esq. As the fibre was hard and difficult to work, it did not attract much attention at first. With improved machinery, however, and the discovery of the means of softening the fibre, jute gradually grew more in favour, until the outbreak of the civil war in America, though causing a stoppage of the cotton supply, gave the trade an impetus which has since gone on increasing, owing to the cheapness at which cloth can be produced from the fibre, and its usefulness for various important purposes. At first the fibre was imported in small quantities to London and Liverpool, and thence transhipped to Dundee. As the trade grew in importance, however, manufacturers began to import direct from Calcutta, and the direct imports now greatly exceed the importation into London. Most of the jute received in Liverpool and London also finds its way to Dundee. In 1849, the imports (exclusive of coast-ways) amounted to 3,176 tons, in 1850 3,127 tons were received. In 1865, the receipts at the harbour, both coast-ways and from Calcutta, reached 39,291 tons. Since then the importation has gone on in an increasing ratio. To give an idea of the expansion of the trade, we give the following returns for the years ending 31st December, 1870, 1875, 1879, and 1881:—

The only other imports from foreign countries to which attention need be directed are timber and whale and seal blubber. In 1876, 46,266 loads of timber arrived at the port, and in 1881, 39,649. The whale and seal blubber imported in 1876 reached 1,694 tons, and in 1881, 2,509 tons. The value of the seal and whale oil and bone received in 1881, was estimated at £130,900. The exports of manufactured goods from the harbour by no means represent the extent of business done in the town, the larger portion of the manufactured goods being sent by rail to Glasgow and Liverpool for exportation to the United States, South America, Australia, &c. The total quantity of linen and jute goods sent by rail from the town in the year 1883 was 71,400 tons; in 1869, 75,570 tons; in 1875, 72,518 tons; in 1876, 56,687 tons; and in 1881, 73,638 tons. In 1875 and 1876 the staple trade of the town, in sympathy with the general trade of the country, was in a very depressed condition. Fifty years ago, there were only four steam spinning mills; there are now probably above one hundred, including spinning and weaving factories. The various productions from flax, hemp, and jute, as has been stated, form the staple trade of the town. The raw materials are imported chiefly from Russia, Prussia, Holland, and India; these are spun by steam power into thread, which, after being bleached, are woven into osanburghs, sheetings, baggings, sailcloth, sacking, dowlas, &c. During the year 1850 the trade of Dundee became animated by augmenting briskness, showing that free trade had increased the prosperity of this important port. At the commencement of the civil war in America, as has been said, the trade of Dundee increased to a most extraordinary extent, fabrics of jute and linen being in great demand to take the place of cotton. Almost every mill received additions, and a large number of new mills were erected. The manufacture of machinery, steam engines, boilers, and millwright work is in a flourishing condition and carried on extensively by several eminent firms, among whom may be mentioned Messrs. Carmichael & Co., Ward Foundry; Thomson, Son & Co., Douglas Foundry; Urquhart, Lindsay & Co., Blackness Foundry; W. B. Thompson, Tay Foundry; Gourlay Brothers & Co., Dundee Foundry; Pearce Brothers, Lilybank Foundry; and Robertson & Orchard, Wallace Foundry. Iron ship building and marine engineering are also important features in the general prosperity and industry of the town, and gives employment to a large number of artisans. Messrs. Gourlay Brothers & Co., Messrs. Alexander Stephen & Sons, Mr. W. B. Thompson, and Messrs. Pearce Brothers, are the principal firms engaged in these important industries. During 1881, eleven vessels, mostly first class steamers, aggregating 18,935 tons, were launched from the different yards. There are also several extensive saw mills and timber yards, the principal of which belong to Messrs. W. Kirkland & Son, Mr. George Jessiman, Messrs. Bell & Sime, and Mr. John Fleming.

DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH OF DUNDEE.—Although Dundee is not conspicuous for architectural beauty it contains several handsome streets. The town is illuminated with gas, the manufacture of which is in the hands of the corporation. The water supply is also in the same hands, the principal supply being obtained from the Loch of Lintrathen and the river Melgum. The greater part of the mansions of the opulent are ranged on the lofty bank of the Tay, westward of the town. This situation commands a view of the river, and the beautiful scenery on the opposite coast. In the central part of the town is a wide oblong area, called the High street, on the south side of which stands the Town House, comprising the Guild Hall, Court Room, and appropriate offices, together with repositories for the town records. The Town House was finished in 1734, from a plan of the elder Adams. The front is handsome, beneath which is a piazza; and from the centre of the building rises a lofty spire, 140 feet high. A large addition has been made to the building, with the view of accommodating all the public offices, at present somewhat scattered. A little to the east of the High street rises the lofty and elegant spire of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. This beautiful church, unfortunately not seen to advantage owing to the close proximity of the adjoining buildings, is built on the Castle hill, near to the site of the ancient castle. The church is in the Gothic style, from designs by Mr. Gilbert Scott, and the spire has been fitted up with a peal of bells, the gift of various members of the congregation. To the zeal and cultivated taste of the late Bishop Forbes the town owes this addition to its too scant architectural beauties. An elegant building has been erected by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, at the east end of High street, in connection with the improvements carried out by the corporation in that quarter. New Commercial street is a splendid thoroughfare, lined on either side by elegant shops and houses, and the old narrow winding Murraygate and Seagate have given place to wider streets. The Public Hall, in Bank street (for which the inhabitants of Dundee are mainly indebted to Lord Kinnaird), was an excellent addition to the public buildings of this town. It is in the Anglo-Italian style of architecture, and its exterior is plain, but bold and massive in detail. Above the entrance lobbies, and projecting into the hall, is a gallery capable of accommodating about 200 people seated comfortably. On the right and left of the entrances are small retiring rooms. The hall itself is a spacious apartment, 130 by 60 feet, and 42 feet 6 inches high, and capable of accommodating about 2,500 people. In 1864 a movement was made for a public organ to improve the hall, and £1,500 was subscribed for the purpose. The organ was inaugurated on the 5th October, 1865, by a grand performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" by the Dundee Cecilia Society. The orchestra in front of the organ can accommodate some 280 performers. Immediately opposite the Kinnaird Hall stands an elegant and imposing building, three storeys in height, with a sunk floor containing printing machinery, &c. the printing establishment of the Dundee Advertiser and People's Journal. This is probably one of the best equipped newspaper printing offices in the country. Two engines of sixteen horse power each drive three "Victory" and other printing machines; on the ground floor the publishing and business departments are conveniently situated; the second floor is mainly devoted to the accommodation of the editorial, reporting, and literary staff; and on the third floor is the composing department, a large room 165 feet long by 35 feet wide, and 28 feet from floor to ceiling. A direct telegraph wire connects the establishment with a branch office in Fleet street, London, and by this means long special reports of parliament, stock exchange business, and other important matters are daily supplied to the readers of this paper. On a commanding site in Lindsay street the premises of the Courier and Argus are situated. These buildings which were only erected a few years ago to provide for an increasing business, are of a chaste and striking architectural design. The front edifice is occupied by the commercial, warehouse, publishing, reporting, and editorial departments. Behind the main building the composing and machine departments are accommodated in a handsome two-storey structure, which contains nearly 10,000 feet of floor space; they are lofty, well lighted, and finely ventilated apartments, and are admitted by newspaper men, who have visited them from all quarters, to be amongst the finest rooms of the kind in the country. Looking up Reform street, an elegant edifice with chaste Doric columns meets the eye. This is the High School, erected in 1834, at a cost of £10,000, but since then extensive additions have been made to it. The building comprises the Burgh Grammar School and an Academy patronised by the corporation, designed to impart a liberal education to the pupils, including instruction in literature, science, and the ancient and modern languages. In addition to the above there are numerous public schools and many private educational establishments. A large new building, called the Albert Institute, has been erected to the south-east of this school, the western portion from designs by Mr. Gilbert Scott, and the eastern portion from designs by Mr. Mackenzie, an able local architect. The cost of the entire building was about £25,000, exclusive of the site, which cost £8,000. The building comprises a public hall, library, reading room, and museum. The design is decorated Gothic, with a grand staircase on the west front. The library, reading room, and museum are free to the public, the town having some years ago adopted the Free Libraries Act. There are at present upwards of 25,000 volumes in the lending department, and 2,000 in the reference department, and large additions are being made from time to time. In the grounds in front of the Albert Institute a statue of George Kintosh, the first representative of the burgh in the reformed Parliament, has recently been placed. It is cast in bronze, and does great credit to the artist, Mr. Steel, Edinburgh. In the south-west corner of the grounds a bronze statue of Burns, also by Steel, has been placed. Here is also a statue, in the grounds, of the late Mr. Carruthers, the inventor of the fan blast. A fountain, which was erected at considerable cost, but which, in the opinion of many, is not all that can be desired, faces the west front of the Institute. To the south of the Albert Institute stands the elegant and convenient Club House, the Free Gaelic church, and the National Bank buildings. In the Nethergate, a short distance west from the High street, stand the "Town's Churches" and the "Old Steeple." The church, or rather churches, of which this tower is the remnant, were destroyed by fire some years ago, but were re-built; and the dimensions of the block are so capacious as to comprise three distinct parochial churches within its walls. Inside the grounds stands the ancient market cross, removed from High street. It is a carved pillar, supporting an unicorn, which holds an armorial shield between its knees. Tradition ascribes the erection of the tower to David, Earl of Huntingdon, but its architectural features indicate a later date as the period of erection. It has undergone a restoration under the superintendence of Mr. Gilbert Scott. A peal of bells, the gift of a number of generous citizens, has been placed in the tower. The tower is looked upon as one of the finest specimens of the style of architecture to which it belongs to be met with. Adjoining the church of St. Andrew, in the Cowgate is a meeting-house for the Glasites—a section of the religious world founded by Mr. John Glass, who, it appears, was made a freeman of Dundee by the town council in 1753. Besides the burial grounds belonging to the corporation, the Western Cemetery in the Perth road has a beautiful site, and is gracefully planted with shrubs and flowers. In this cemetery lie the remains of William Thom, known as the Inverury Poet, and the author of the "Mitherless Bairn." Dudhope Castle, originally the seat of the Semyngour family, standard bearers to the Scottish kings, stands on the face of the rising ground to the north of the town, and was at one time the property of Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee; it is now converted into a barracks. From the approach to this ancient mansion is a fine view of the gaol, the plan of which admits of the classification of offenders. Adjoining the entrance to the barracks is the public bleaching green; near this spot a time gun has been placed. The Royal Infirmary, erected in 1853, near to the barracks, furnishes an attractive evidence of the benevolent efforts of the wealthy for the amelioration of human suffering and misery. It is from designs by Messrs. Coe & Goodwin, of London, and has, with its wings, central tower, and embattled parapets, a very noble appearance. The Royal Lunatic Asylum, in the Friar road, both for elegance and accommodation, will not suffer from comparison with any kindred establishment in Scotland. The growth of the town, however, has rendered its removal necessary, and the erection of a new asylum, removed from the din and bustle of the place, has been determined on. The Royal Orphan Institution, founded in 1815, is an admirable charity, the orphans being accommodated in a beautiful and commodious building at Craigie terrace, overlooking the river. The Dundee Industrial Schools Society watch over two excellent institutions for the educational training of neglected children. One for girls is accommodated in a suitable building in Ward road; the other, for boys, is at Baldovan, a healthy suburban village to the north of the town. There is also an excellent asylum at Baldovan, under the patronage of Queen Victoria, for the treatment of imbecile and idiot children. In this place mention may be made of the Mars Training Ship Institution for Homeless and Destitute Boys. The "Mars," an old three decker, is moored in the Tay at Woodhaven, and several hundred boys are educated on board chiefly with a view to their joining either merchant vessels or vessels belonging to the royal navy. An institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, established 1843, and situated at Dudhope Bank, Lochee road, is another noteworthy educational enterprise of a charitable nature. It is maintained by the directors of the Dundee Association for Aiding the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, from the interest of invested funds, and from the interest of property left by the late James Keay, Esq. In close proximity to the old Lunatic Asylum, stands the Poor House, capable of holding about 300 inmates. It was opened for their reception in November, 1856, and cost about £10,000. Since that time wings for hospital purposes have been built at the sole expense of Mr. Molison, chairman of the Parochial Board, at a cost of upwards of £1,000. In the same neighbourhood stands the Morgan hospital, occupying a commanding site. The building, which is of massive and striking proportions, is seen to advantage from all the higher parts of the town, as well as from the river. This institution is for the education and maintenance of one hundred boys, the sons of tradesmen, mechanics, and persons of the working classes generally, whose parents stand in need of assistance, and who are only admitted between the ages of seven and ten years, and leave at the age of fifteen years. One or both of the parents of the boys must have been born in Dundee, Forfar, Montrose, or Arbroath, the preference being given to the boys of parents who belong to this town. The institution owes its existence to the benevolence of the late Mr. Morgan, a native of Dundee, who left the bulk of his fortune to carry out the above-mentioned objects. The total sum secured after a law plea in regard to the validity of the will—for the erection and maintenance of the institution was £73,500. The building is in the Flemish-Gothic style, and is quadrangular in form, two storeys in height, with an open court inside, a centre tower, rising to the height of 120 feet; the building was erected from designs by Poddie and Kinncr, architects, Edinburgh, at a cost of about £15,000. Arrangements are at present (February, 1883) in progress for the establishment of two noble educational institutions. Through the munificence of Miss Baxter, of Balgairis, and Dr. Boyd Baxter, a completely equipped college is about to be opened. Miss Baxter and her relative have provided £150,000 for these purposes. An excellent open site, known as the Whiteley's, has been secured in the Nethergate, and it is intended to institute in the meantime five chairs—classics and history, English literature and language, chemistry, natural philosophy, and mathematics and engineering, and probably modern languages. There are already buildings on the site acquired that can be easily adapted for the purposes intended, and the college is expected to be in active operation at an early date. In addition to this, ex-Ballie Harris has given £30,000 to the town, £10,000 whereof is to be spent in erecting a new secondary school under the School Board, and £20,000 is to be devoted to the improvement of the existing High School. In the centre of Dock street, and spanning the north end of the Mid quay, is a gorgeous arch, or rather a structure surmounting three arches; a capacious central one, and two of smaller dimensions at the sides. The style is Norman and each front is richly sculptured with countless intersections of circular arches; two octagonal turrets rise from the summit. This costly monument was raised to commemorate the landing near this spot of Queen Victoria. To the east of King William's Dock in the same street stands the Custom House, an imposing building with a Grecian portico. Opposite the Custom House a Sailors' Home has been recently erected. It was formally opened by the Earl of Dalhousie on 16th December, 1881. The building cost upwards of £12,000, the money having been provided by several philanthropic citizens. There is sleeping accommodation for about 100 seamen, and ample provision has been made for securing the comfort of those who avail themselves of the accommodation provided. The offices of the Mercantile Marine Department are in the same building. From the west end of Dock street, Union street forms a communication with the Nethergate; it contains excellent shops, and the Thistle Hall, much used for public meetings. The various banking establishment occupy buildings which likewise contribute to the embellishment of the town, as well as to the facilities of its trade. At the top of Reform street, and corner of Ward road, is the post and postal telegraph offices—a handsome and convenient building in the Italian style of architecture. Nearly £5,000 was expended in erecting this useful establishment, which is well laid out, and is an elegant and commodious building. It is in immediate contiguity to the Royal Exchange and Chamber of Commerce; and its admirable situation gives it the additional advantage of nearness of access to the members of those institutions, besides placing it in a healthy locality where it may be seen to advantage. The Royal Exchange and Chamber of Commerce, Pamphure street, was erected in 1852, at a cost of about £10,000. It is a handsome building, in the Flemish-Gothic style of the 14th century. The Young Men's Christian Association Rooms in Constitution road are probably as well adapted for their purpose as any in the Kingdom. The Carr Night Refuge, in West Bell street, erected by money left for that purpose by the late Mrs. Carr, supplies a long felt want in affording a comfortable retreat for the night to homeless strangers. Of late years several elegant churches have been erected in the town. Free St. Paul's and Free St. Enoch's in the Nethergate, and St. Mark's Established Church and the McChyne Memorial Church in the Perth road may be particularly mentioned. In 1855 a splendid Public Park of upwards of 30 acres was presented to the town by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart., and endowed with funds necessary to maintain it. The park which is at the east end of the town, was beautifully laid out by the late Sir Joseph Paxton, and, with the endowment, cost Sir David no less than £50,000. To the east of the Baxter Park is the Eastern Necropolis, a beautifully laid out cemetery. In 1853 the Corporation acquired Balgairis hill, a wooded eminence at the west end of the town, and partly as a public park and partly as a cemetery for the west end of the burgh. The portion retained as a public park is 36 acres in extent. It is finely wooded, and, from the higher parts of the ground magnificent views are obtained. Altogether, the town has also been laid out so as to render it more convenient as a place of recreation. In addition to the two parks mentioned, the inhabitants have the privilege of the Magdalen Green, close by the river at the west end of the town, and the Barracks Park, as places of recreation. The

"Esplanade," formed by an arrangement with the railway companies when the Tay Bridge Works were constructed, is one of the finest walks or drives to be found anywhere. Five newspapers issue weekly from the press of Dundee, and maintain an increasing circulation. The Dundee Advertiser is published daily, and a semi-weekly edition on Tuesdays and Fridays, the market days. This is the leading paper, and has an extensive circulation in the county and district, as well as in the town. The People's Journal, published on Saturday, has a circulation of 140,000 copies weekly. Some years ago, a subscription by its readers raised upwards of £300 for the National Lifeboat Institution. The Evening Telegraph, a halfpenny evening journal, appeals to a large class of readers, and has an extensive circulation in Dundee and the neighbouring towns and villages. The Dundee Courier and Argus is the oldest morning paper in the north-east of Scotland. A bi-weekly edition is published on Tuesdays and Fridays. The Weekly News, published on Saturdays, is one of the most attractive weeklies issued, and contains tales, historical, military, naval and humorous sketches. It has a large quantity of original matter, and within the last few years has gained extensively in popularity. The municipal government of Dundee is exercised by a provost, six bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, an hospital master, a kirk master, and a council of, including the magistrates, twenty-eight members. There are six courts held within the town—the Burgh or Bailie Court, the Sheriff's Court, the Commissary Court, the Guild Court, the Police Court, and the Justice of Peace Small Debt Court. The town is divided into districts and wards, for the convenience of the registration of the burgh electors. Dundee sends two representatives to Parliament. George Armitstead, Esq., and Frank Henderson, Esq., are the present members. The principal market days are Tuesday and Friday; and there is a cattle and sheep market held every Tuesday. Fairs—Stobbs's fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 11th July, or the first Tuesday following (o.s.); Dundee first fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 26th August, if that day falls on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, if not, the first Tuesday after the 26th of August (N.S.); and the second Dundee fair on the 19th September, the same rule observed as that regulating the first fair. Feeding markets for servants are held on the 25th of May and on the 22nd November, or on the first Friday thereafter.

The number of inhabitants by the census of 1871 was 118,977, and by the returns for 1881, 140,054, showing an increase in ten years of 21,077. The assessable rental has grown from £87,544 in 1871-72 to £595,576 in 1880-81.

LIFF and BENVIE is an united parish, the latter incorporated with the former in 1758. The district, which lies immediately west of Dundee, with a portion touching the Tay, is generally well cultivated, and beneath the surface, freestone, belonging to the old red sandstone formation, is found and extensively quarried in various parts of the parish. There are within the parishes the villages of LIFF, BENVIE, BIRKHILL, CAMPERDOWN, and LOCREE (the two latter will be found given elsewhere), and part of INVERGOWRIE. The Caledonian Railway runs through the parish. The greater part of the population of this parish is included in the west of Dundee.

MAINS, formerly called Strathdighty, is a parish lying immediately north of that of Dundee (its post town), about four miles therefrom, and chiefly in the vale of the river Dighty, which intersects the parish, and divides it into two nearly equal parts in its course to the Tay. From the banks of the stream the ground rises gently to the north and south; the soil is fertile and well cultivated, and the country has a most pleasant aspect. On the Dighty are several mills, and near the north bank of the river is the extensive bleach-field of Claverhouse, at no great distance from which was the seat of General Grahame, whose title of "Claverhouse" (applied from this patrimonial estate) once sounded such alarm in Scotland. The Grahames, of Fintry, were one of the oldest families in this part of the country. Freestone and slate quarries supply some occupation in this parish. The small parish of STRATHMARTINE is now united to that of Mains, which contains the parish church, a Free church, and public schools. DOWNFIELD is a village in this parish. An asylum for the treatment of imbecile and idiot children was founded at Baldovan, in 1853, by Lady Jane Ogilvy. The Dundee and Newtyle Railway runs through the parish, and has stations at BALDOVAN and MALDRAGON. Acreage, 6,301; population in 1871, 2,749.

LONGFORGAN is a parish (county of Perth), 6 miles from Dundee, its post town, and a mile from the station of its name on the Dundee and Perth Railway. It varies from one to four miles in breadth and nine miles in length, forming the eastern boundary of the Carse of Gowrie, and extending along the Tay on its southern extremity for more than four miles. It is surrounded on three sides—by Inchture, Abernethy, Kettins, Lundie and Fowls, Liff and Benvie. The village is situated on the ridge at an elevation of about 130 feet above the Tay, of which, with the whole of the intermediate country to the east, and particularly to the south and south-west, it commands an uninterrupted prospect. Near here, situated in a dell, are the ruins of a chapel said to have been erected by Malcolm IV. in 1164, for a community of Cistercian monks. Castle Huntly is the only building of any note in the parish, and forms a noble specimen of an old baronial residence. It was erected about the middle of the fifteenth century, by the second Lord Gray, of Fowls, who named it after his lady, a daughter of the Earl of Huntly, and who had large possessions in the Carse; its walls are ten feet thick, and the height of the round tower is 116 feet; the view from the top is much and deservedly admired, commanding extensive and beautiful prospects of the Fife coast, with the Ochils and other loftier mountains, &c. The parish church is conveniently situated, as is also a Board school. The soil of the parish varies in quality, but upon the whole is exceedingly productive. There is also an abundant supply of stone of good quality. A fair is held every third Saturday in June (o.s.) chiefly for the sale of cattle. Acreage of the parish, 8,528; population in 1871, 1,753, and in 1881, 1,812.

INVERGOWRIE or Mylnfield is a village singularly situated, being partly in Perthshire and partly in Forfarshire, one portion being in the parish of Longforgran, the other in that of Liff. It is three miles from Dundee. There is a very neat Free church, and Board school. A fragment of an ancient church, said to be the oldest in Scotland, forms an interesting object. A graveyard surrounds it, in which are deposited the remains of several highly respectable persons; among others the Very Rev. Heneage Horsley, M.A. Dean of Brechin and Prebendary of Saint Asaph, son of the renowned Dr. Horsley, Bishop of Saint Asaph. He died in 1847. At BULLIONFIELD, contiguous to the above, in the parish of Liff, is the only paper mill in the county. The Dundee and Perth Railway has a station near a village.
